Preface

When I first heard about the Ik back in September 2005, I was thoroughly intrigued. Here was a people just emerging from the mists of time, from that now dark and shrouded realm of African prehistory. Judging by appearances, their journey had not been easy. Their story spoke of great suffering in the form of sickness, suppression, starvation, and slaughter. And yet, somehow, there they were, limping into the 21st century as survivors of conditions most of us cannot imagine. Having grown up in a safe and serene community in the American South, I thought the Ik seemed stranger than fiction. People like this actually exist out there? I found myself wanting to know more about them, wanting to know who they are. Subconsciously I sensed that anyone who could endure what they had endured could perhaps teach me something about being truly human.

My quest to know the Ik has led me down a winding path to the present. Over the years I have been frustrated by my inability to enter fully into their world, to see reality through their eyes. More than once I wished I were an anthropologist, so I could get a better grasp of their essence as a people. But time and time again, life steered me right back to the language – to Ikétôd. I gradually learned to accept that their language is a doorway to their spirit, and that as a linguist, I could only open the door for others, and point the way to the Promised Land while I remain at the threshold. This book can act as a key to that door, a key that has been carefully shaped and smoothened by hands tired yet trembling with purpose.

Living in Ikland has taught me a lot about being human, but not in the way I expected. It was not by becoming ‘one with the people’ that I learned what it is like to survive subhuman conditions. And it was not physical starvation, or sickness, or slaughter that I was forced to endure. No, I was spared those things. Yet all the same, in Ikland I became acquainted with spiritual starvation, social sickness, and the wholesale slaughter of my cultural, religious, and intellectual idols. And just as the Ik have learned that life does not consist in ‘bread alone’, nor in health, nor in security – but can carry on living with dignity and humanity – I have learned that at the rock bottom of my soul, where my self ends and the world begins, there is where Life resides. That realization is my ‘pearl of great price’ for which I have sold everything else and would do it all over again.

Acknowledgements

Compiling a dictionary such as this one is a massive undertaking, far more so than I ever imagined it would be. Although I myself spent many hours, days, and months working alone on this project, a whole host of people put me in a position to do so. And it is here that I wish to acknowledge and thank them all.

First, I want to express a heartfelt Ilákásukotíàà zùk<sup>u</sup> to all the Ik people of the Timu Forest area for welcoming us into their community and patiently putting up with the long process of a foreigner trying to learn their language. To the following Ik men and women, I give thanks for their participation in a word-collecting workshop that took place in October 2009, during which roughly 7,000 Ik words were amassed: Ariko Hillary, Kunume Cecilia, Lochul Jacob, Lokure Jacob, Longoli Philip, Losike Peter, Lotuk Vincent, Nakiru Rose, Nangoli Esther, †Ngiriko Fideli, Ngoya Joseph, Ochen Simon Peter, Sire Hillary, and Teko Gabriel.

A second group of Ik men are sincerely thanked for giving me a clearer view of the Ik sound system and for helping me edit several hundred words during an orthography workshop in April 2014: Amida Zachary, Dakae Sipriano, Lokauwa Simon, Lokwameri Sylvester, Lomeri John Mark, Longoli Philip, Longoli Simon, Lopeyok Simon, †Lopuwa Paul, and Lotuk Paul. One of those men, Longoli Philip, deserves special thanks for the years he spent as my main guide into the grammar and lexicon of his mother tongue. The number and quality of entries in this book are owed in large part to his skillful labors. Four other men – Lojere Philip, †Lochiyo Gabriel, Lokwang Hillary, and †Lopuwa Paul – also deserve my thanks for teaching me bits of the language at various points along the journey.

But it is another group of Ik men that I wish to give special honor. These are the ones who for an entire year went with me through every word in this dictionary to refine their spellings and define their meanings. They include the respectable elders Iuda Lokauwa, Locham Gabriel, and Lemu Simon, as well as our translators Kali Clement, Lotengan Emmanuel, and Lopeyok Simon. The three elders not only shared their intimate knowledge of the language with me but also befriended me with a grace and humility that can only come with age. Every moment I spent with them was a blessing I will never forget. As they said, if I ever come back, I should ask if those old men are still around. I pray they are.

Acknowledgements

Although teaching foreigners Ik-speak has usually been the domain of men, I wish to bring special attention to two Ik women who, through their resilient friendship and lively conversation, greatly enhanced my grasp of the language. These are the highly esteemed Nache Esther and Nakiru ‘Akóóro’ Rose.

Next, I want to gratefully mention those in the long line of linguists who worked on the Ik language and – in person or publication – passed their knowledge down to me: Fr. J. P. Crazzolaro who wrote the first recorded grammatical description of the language; A. N. Tucker whose series of articles on Ik expanded my knowledge considerably; Fritz Serzisko who penned several insightful articles and books on Ik and Kuliak; Bernd Heine who wrote numerous works on Ik and Kuliak and authored a grammar sketch and dictionary of the language (1999); Richard Hoffman who studied the grammar and lexicon, devised a practical orthography, and tirelessly supported language development efforts on behalf of the Ik; Christa König who wrote several articles and an entire book on the Ik case system; Ron Moe who helped me lead a word-collection workshop; Keith Snider who trained me in tone analysis; Kate Schell who collected dozens of hours of recorded Ik texts; and Dusty Hill who supervised me throughout the process.

Another group I wish to thank are our friends and family members whose generous and faithful donations have made it possible for us to live and work in Uganda since 2008. It has been a privilege to be financially supported in doing long-term work on the Ik language, and I do not take that for granted.

For all their hard work pushing this project through to completion, I gratefully acknowledge the series editors: Adams Bodomo, Ken Hiraiwa, and Firmin Ahoua. My sincere thanks also go the reviewers and proofreaders who helped me improve this manuscript, to Monika Feinen for drawing up a lovely map of Ikland (Figure 1), and lastly to Sebastian Nordhoff, whose patient help and technical expertise in manuscript preparation I could never have done without.

I also want to thank my dear family: my two adopted Ik daughters, Kaloyang Mercy and Lemu Immaculate, and my wife Amber Dawn. Their loving presence enabled me to carry out this long work in an otherwise isolated and often very lonely environment. The existence of this book is owed in large measure to Amber’s innumerable sacrifices big and small. It came into being at great cost to her. For that and many other reasons, I thank her from the bottom of my heart.

Above all else, I want to praise the God whose Word became flesh – ὁ λόγος σὰρξ ἐγένετο – making a linguistic cosmos where my mind and the Ik language could collide and radiate bright rays of new knowledge out into the world.

Part I

Introduction

1 The Ik language

Ik is the native language of the Ik people who live on a narrow swath of land in the northeastern corner of Uganda, East Africa. The people call their language Icétôd, which means ‘Ik-speech’ or ‘Ik-talk’ and is pronounced ee-CHAY-TOad or in phonetic symbols, [itʃétôd̥]. Ik belongs to a small cluster of languages called ‘Kuliak’, which also includes Nyang’ia of Lobalangit and Soo/Tepeth of Mounts Moroto, Napak, and Kadam – all in Uganda’s magnificent Karamoja Region.

At the outset, let me state definitively that Ik is not a dialect of Karimojong, nor is it even Nilotic or ‘Hamitic’. And it is certainly not Bantu (as some have asked me). Scholars disagree as to whether it is related to Karimojong at all, but if it is, it would be a distant relationship within the great Nilo-Saharan language family, much as English is related to Russian or Hindi within Indo-European.

One reason people assume Ik is a dialect of Karimojong is that the Ik have long been surrounded and dominated by the pastoralist Dodoth, Toposa, Turkana, and Jie. These groups, as well as the Karimojong proper, all speak mutually intelligible forms of a speech variety called ‘Ateker’, ‘Teso-Turkana’, or ‘Tunga’. Another reason Ik seems similar to Karimojong is that it has borrowed many hundreds of words from Teso-Turkana speech varieties over the centuries. In addition to lexical borrowing, the close contact between the Ik and Teso-Turkana peoples has caused Ik grammar to become more like Teso-Turkana in various ways.

But despite the many superficial similarities one may see between Ik and Teso-Turkana, their grammatical systems are actually quite different. For instance, while their vowel inventories are similar, Ik has many more consonants than Teso-Turkana, including the ejectives /k/ and /ts/, which are found in no other Ugandan language. Ik also has an elaborate case system with eight cases all marked with suffixes, whereas Teso-Turkana languages mark only four cases, some using only tone to do so. And although both Ik and Teso-Turkana order their words as Verb-Subject-Object in main clauses, in subordinate clauses, Ik changes the order to Subject-Verb-Object. These are but a few examples among others that show the significant differences between Ik and Teso-Turkana.

2 The dictionary

This book contains a bilingual Ik-English dictionary and an English-Ik reversal index. The dictionary section lists all the Ik words I have recorded up to now and offers English definitions for them. Including proper names, there are approximately 8,700 entries in the dictionary. While I have done all I could to collect as many words as possible within the limits of time and resources, no doubt many hundreds of other words still lurk out there in the recesses of Ikian minds. It will not be until more texts are written in Ik that these missing words might be gently coaxed out onto the page and into more books like the present one.

Although the presumed purpose of a dictionary is to propound the current meanings of the words of a language, I fear that purpose is only partly achieved in this volume. The true meanings of words are lived meanings, intended by living beings in a living world. To capture them on a page is to encase them in black rock and white ice. A native speaker of Ik may recognize in my English definitions familiar traces of true meaning but never all of it. As a foreign, non-native speaker of the language, my grasp of the living meanings of Ik words is severely limited. For the only way to learn living linguistic meanings is to experience life linguistically, through a language, through its words and phrases and tropes. Still, I have been fortunate enough to have had a few real-life experiences in Ik, for instance, when I learned the living meaning of the verb isees ‘to miss’ by actually missing a bushpig boar as I tried to spear it when it charged toward me out of a thicket. The young Ik hunters never let me forget that miss, and as they retold the story with glee, they always used that particular verb. So when I hear it, I not only know what it means in terms of ‘missing’, but I also feel the living overtones that include shame, regret, loss of opportunity, diminution of manhood, and so on. That is how one learns the meanings of words.

Due to the exceptional nature of such experiences, most of the Ik words in this volume I have had to define extrinsically, from the outside. Unfortunately, as a foreign lexicographer, I do not inhabit the words. All I could really do was try to understand the words as best I could and render them in perspicacious English, marking out a felicitous meeting place between two very different modes of linguistic being-in-the-world. To the degree that I succeeded in this endeavor, this is what I hope to be a worthwhile first full-scale Ik-English lexicon.

The English definitions the reader will find are of various types. Some Ik words lend themselves easily to one-word, entirely accurate glosses, for example, gubérá- as ‘leopard’. Others require a short phrase in English, for instance, kóré- as the ‘back of the knee’. Still others, the ones that are conceptually more distant from English, call for longer descriptions, as when makúli- is defined as a ‘round grass beehive cover that goes over the end of a hollow beehive’.

As well as being a record of modern Ik to be used for modern purposes, this dictionary also provides much data for historical research. Because the Ik have left little in the way of archaeology over the ages, and because oral histories tend to be vague, inconsistent, and undated, language is one of the few lenses through which to investigate prehistory. Already the Ik lexicon gives some tantalizing hints as to the ancient northern East African origins of the Ik, for example in the link between words like səkʒ- ‘hoof’ and Arabic saaq ‘foot’ and Gumuz tʃagw ‘foot’, or between kídʒ- ‘bite’ and Maltese Arabic gidem ‘bite’ and Uduk k’ūcūr ‘suck’. Every Ik word is a cultural relic, a linguistic artifact sticking out of the red clays of time and memory. Each one has been molded by a million mouthings, much as grains of sand are ground down by wind and water. Each has its own history, an origin and a tortuous path of descent to its present form, the same path, we can assume, that its many speakers have taken. This is where the fields of etymology and historical linguistics (or ‘paleolinguistics’) can provide some evidence on which to build a grounded sense of identity and cultural history.

A deeply rooted sense of history and identity is important because it could help give the Ik a more sure footing as they transition into a nationally-minded Ugandan society and a globally-minded international society. If I imagine the future fate of the Ik language, I can see two possible developmental paths it could take. The first is that it could be lost by being totally assimilated by Karimojong, much like Nyang’ia already has and Soo/Tepeth is in danger of doing, or by succumbing to the dazzling promise of upward mobility that English seems to offer. If either of these forms of language death should take place, at least this book would remain as a monument to a once noble language-mediated world-view.

The second path the Ik language could take into the future is the one I have often daydreamed of. It is the one that would fulfill my scholarly strivings and confirm my greatest hopes for the Ik. In this path, Ik would go on to become the language of a highly literate populace who would use it skillfully to promote their own well-being. With explicit knowledge of their grammar and lexicon, educated Ik people would harness the expressive power of their native-born tongue and make it a vehicle of music, poetry, fiction, philosophy, theology, medicine, education, policy – the full gamut of human expression. This scrappy language that has barely scraped by countless threats to its existence yet somehow managed to pull through, this language that contains the linguistic genes of so many other languages from unrelated stocks, this small language of a small people in small place, could go on to become an enduring symbol of the Ikian spirit.

As portrayed in Figure 1, the Ik language area can be viewed imaginatively from an ‘Ik-centric’ perspective as a ‘heart’ of East Africa. There it lies, near the arterial convergence of four East African nations: Uganda, South Sudan, Ethiopia, and Kenya. Over the centuries the Ik have migrated through and throughout each of these four countries. While doing so, their language absorbed words and grammatical traits from the many languages spoken there. So, in a real sense, Ik embodies the linguistic heritage of northern East Africa. Thus, could it be that Ik is providentially situated to blossom into a language that can serve the full range of communicative needs of a modernized Ik society, and then extend its fruited boughs over the escarpment in four directions to become a blessing to the neighboring nations? In the end, only time will tell, and yet it is toward the fulfillment of that dream that this work on Ik has been lovingly consecrated.

3 Using the dictionary

3.1 Writing system

The Ik script used in this dictionary and grammar sketch is based on what is called the Linguistic Orthography (LingO) as described in Schrock (2015). The LingO is a compromise between the simpler Popular Orthography (PopO) and a more scientific writing system. The main reason for choosing the LingO over the PopO is that the LingO encodes three very important features of the Ik sound system: voiceless vowels, vowel harmony, and tone. Although these three features are difficult to remember and write, they are indispensable for the correct pronunciation of Ik. Therefore it was decided that for this book to be an accurate and reliable record of the language, the proper pronunciations would have to be reflected in the spellings. LingO writing can easily be converted to PopO, but the reverse is not true, since it requires greater linguistic awareness.

The alphabetical order of Ik letters is given below. Note that the vowel pairs E/É, I/Í, O/Ó, and U/Ú – whose two members differ only in terms of a linguistic feature called Advanced Tongue Root [ATR] – are alphabetized as if they were the same letter. This is done to assist non-native speakers of Ik in finding words beginning with vowels they might not be able to distinguish at first. Also note that the letter (3) is in parentheses because even though it belongs to the alphabet, no recorded Ik word begins with it. For the pronunciation of these letters, the reader is referred ahead to §2.1 of the grammar sketch section.

- Ik alphabetical order: A B B C D D Dz E/É F G H Hy I/Í J J K K L M N N Ŋ O/Ó P R S T Ts Ts' U/Ú W X Y Z (3)

3.2 Structure of entries

The Ik-English dictionary section contains entries of the following kinds of Ik words: nouns, pronouns, demonstratives, quantifiers, numerals, prepositions, verbs, adverbs, ideophones, interjections, nursery words, complementizers, and connectives (or conjunctions). For a brief description of each word class, the reader is referred to §3 of the grammar sketch at the back of the book. The goal of the present section is to explain to the user the structure of lexicographical entries. To do this, an example of a noun entry and a verb entry are discussed.

A typical noun entry has several components. To identify them, match the numbered components in this explanatory paragraph with the superscript number in the model entry below. 1) The lexical headword is in bold typeface. It is the citation form of the noun, that is, the form of the noun spoken in isolation. In Ik, the citation form takes the nominative case (see §7.2). 2) The root or lexical form is in parentheses. It is hyphenated to show that it still needs a case ending, and it is the form on which to base all other case forms of this noun. This particular noun is also hyphenated in the middle to signify that it is a compound noun made of two parts (see §4.3 of the grammar). 3) This is an abbreviation for ‘plural’, indicating that the next item is the plural form of the headword. 4) This is the plural form of the singular headword bàdiàm. 5) This number (1) indicates that what follows is the first and primary sense or meaning of the headword. 6) This is an abbreviation of the grammatical category of the word, in this case n. for ‘noun’. 7) After the primary sense, one or more other numbered senses of the word may be added. 8) After the senses, one or more notes may mention further information about the entry, for example cultural details or suggestions for synonyms or near-synonyms.

A typical verb entry has similar components but also some different ones: 1) Just as with nouns, the verbal headword is shown in bold typeface. This is the citation form of the verb, which in Ik appears in the infinitive form and nominative case (see §8.2 in the grammar). As an infinitive, the verb is acting as a noun at this point, much like ‘to go’ or ‘going’ in English. To use an Ik infinitive as a verb, simply remove the infinitive suffix (either -òni- or -ésí-) and use the appropriate suffixes (see §8.7). 2) Then, the form in the parentheses is the lexical form of the infinitival headword, the one that is the base for all other case-inflected forms of the verb. 3) This number (1) indicates that what follows is the first and primary sense or meaning of the headword. 4) This is an abbreviation of the grammatical category of the headword, in this case v. for ‘verb’. 5) After the primary sense, one or more other senses of the headword may be added. 6) This short note directs the user to a synonym or near-synonym of the headword.

Over a hundred Ik verb roots end in /a/, /e/, or /ε/, meaning that when an infinitive suffix is added to the root, these root-final vowels are assimilated (see §2.4.4). For example, though the root for ‘miss’ is isá-, the infinitive form is isεεs, which obscures the root-final vowel. Lest the dictionary user hear a form of the root isá- in speech and then fail to deduce that its infinitive is isεεs, both root and infinitive have been listed in the dictionary. The entry for isá- includes the notation (<isεεs) which indicates that isεεs is the entry the user should go to for the definition. Conversely, the entry for isεεs ‘to miss’ includes both the lexical form of the infinitive and the bare root, as in: isεεs (isεεs/-isá-).

3.3 Tips for finding words

Finally, because a good number of Ik words have more than one form, and because many of them can be reasonably spelled in multiple ways, let me offer the user the following tips for locating polymorphous words in the dictionary:

- If you are looking up a verb beginning with /i/ or /i/ and cannot find it, remove the /i/ or /i/ and try again. Conversely, if you are looking up a verb and cannot find it, try adding an /i/ or /i/ to see if that takes you to a word.
- If you are looking up a word beginning with /w/ and cannot find it, try replacing the /w/ with /ɔ/, /o/, /ʌ/, or /u/ and vice versa.
- If you are looking up a word beginning with /y/ and cannot find it, try placing the /y/ with /i/ or /i/ and vice versa.
- If you are looking up a noun beginning with /ɲa/ and cannot find it, try replacing it with /ɲe/ and vice versa.
- If you are looking up a noun beginning with /ɲe/ and cannot find it, try replacing it with /ɲo/ and vice versa.
- If you are looking up a word beginning with /ts/ and cannot find it, try replacing it with /ts’/ and vice versa.

- If you are looking up a word beginning with /dz/ and cannot find it, try replacing it with /ts/ or /ts'/ and vice versa.
- If you are looking up a word beginning with /d/ and cannot find it, try replacing it with /d'/ or /t/ and vice versa.
- If you are looking up a word beginning with /g/ and cannot find it, try replacing it with /k/ or /ŋ/ and vice versa.
- If you are looking up a word containing the vowels /e, i, o, u/ and cannot find it, try replacing the vowel with /ɛ, ɪ, ɔ, ʊ/.

Part IV

Grammar sketch

1 Introduction

Although the bulk of this book is devoted to the dictionary and reversal index, the following section offers an overview sketch of Ik grammar that covers most important features of the total grammatical system. Those who wish to dig deeper are encouraged to consult the fuller treatment published as A grammar of Ik (Icétód): Northeast Uganda's last thriving Kuliak language (Schrock 2014), which is available for free downloading from several websites on the internet.

Linguistic concepts are most easily defined with linguistic terminology. Thus, due to limitations of time and space, this sketch of Ik grammar is geared in style toward the general linguist. And yet a primary aim has been to clearly define some of the key terms used and to describe the grammatical structures in simple, straightforward language. Unfortunately, some of the discussion may still remain opaque to non-linguist readers. If such persons wish to know more, I am very willing to clarify or explain in layman's terms any point raised in this grammar sketch. Feel free to contact me any time at: betsoniik@gmail.com.

The grammar sketch begins with the language's sound system (phonology) and then proceeds to words and word-building strategies (morphology). It ends with a shallow dip into syntax. Because of its length and technical nature, the grammar sketch is probably most useful as a reference tool. However, should the reader have the opportunity, it may prove beneficial to read the sketch from front to back in order to gain a bird's-eye view of the whole system.

Learning any language from printed sources alone is rarely ideal. Rather, every learner would ideally have the chance to soak up language naturally as children do. Sadly, most adult learners do not have that luxury. Because of that, I recommend creatively mixing language-learning approaches to suit one's personality, learning style, schedule, and responsibilities. Studying grammar from a book like this one will not appeal to everyone, yet all learners will occasionally get stuck on points of grammar during the course of their learning. Just as the foregoing dictionary can help you fill in gaps where specific words need to be, this grammar sketch can help fill in holes in your understanding of how Ik works.

2 Phonology

2.1 Consonants and vowels

Ik has an array of thirty consonants and nine vowels, which are presented in Table 1. In the table's first column are shown the alphabetical letters used to represent these sounds. The second column shows the phonetic symbol for the sound used by the International Phonetic Alphabet (IPA). Then in the third column, an approximate English equivalent is given in bold typeface, or else an explanation of how the sound is made if there is no English approximation.

Those sounds in Table 1 that have a small square under the IPA symbol are pronounced with the tip of the tongue a bit farther forward than in English. Especially [d̟], [ŋ̟], and [t̟] are affected; sometimes they are fronted so much that they touch the back of the front teeth. It is important not to pronounce [d̟] exactly like an English ‘d’ as this sounds more like the Ik sound [d] which contrasts with [d̟]. The sounds [b, d, ɡ, j] are called IMPLOSIVES because they are made by ‘imploding’ or sucking air into the mouth rather than expelling air from the lungs. The sounds [kʰ] and [tsʰ] are called EJECTIVES because they are made by ejecting air from the throat cavity instead of from the lungs. Lastly, the sound [hʲ], unlike an [h], is made with the vocal chords vibrating, giving it a raspy, throaty sound. It only occurs at the beginning of words. The nine Ik vowels – [a, e, ɛ, i, ɪ, ɔ, o, ʊ, u] – operate in a vowel harmony system, which is discussed in §2.5.

2.2 Consonant devoicing

At the end of an Ik word, if silence immediately follows, voiced consonants are devoiced. In other words, they sound more like unvoiced consonants in that environment. This is similar to German, for instance, where the word Tag ‘day’ is pronounced as [tak]. Consonant devoicing most noticeably affects /d/ and /g/ in Ik, as when êd ‘name’ sounds like [êt] or when hêg ‘marrow’ sounds like [hêk].

2.3 Vowel devoicing

Ik vowels are also devoiced before a pause. This is important because every word in every grammatical context – without exception – ends in a vowel. If that final vowel is not immediately followed by another sound, then it is whispered or even left totally inaudible (for example, after the consonants /f, m, n, ɲ, r, s, z, ʒ/). It has become a tradition in scholarly writing on Ik to write whispered vowels with the following raised (superscript) symbols: <i̥, e̥, ɛ̥, ɪ̥, ɔ̥, o̥, ʊ̥, u̥>.

2.4 Morphophonology

2.4.1 Deaffrication

The affricates /c/ and /j/ are occasionally deaffricated or ‘hardened’ into their non-affricate counterparts /k/ and /g/, respectively. This is not a general phonological tendency in the language but is, rather, limited to a small handful of words. Moreover, the principle is applied in different ways to different words. For instance, in the word muceé- ‘path, way’, the /c/ is hardened to /k/ when the word is used in the instrumental case (see §7.7): muko ‘on the way’. Secondly, as an instance of idiolectal variation, the plural inclusive pronoun ɲjíní- ‘we all (including addressees)’ is pronounced idiosyncratically as ɲgíní- by a minority of speakers. Thirdly, when the words Icé- ‘Ik people’ and wicé- ‘children’ are declined for the nominative or instrumental cases, their /c/ hardens to /k/. This type of deaffrication can be clearly seen in a case declension, like the one in Table 2. Note that, as explained later in §2.4.3, all cases have non-final and final forms:

2.4.2 Haplology

In Ik, when a consonant in one morpheme is made at the same place of articulation as a consonant in the next morpheme, HAPLOLOGY may occur – the deletion of the first of the two similar consonants. One example of this involves the venitive suffix {-ét-} and the andative suffix {-ukot-}, both of which end in /t/. If another suffix containing /t/, /d/, or /s/ is attached to either of these, their final /t/ may be omitted. To illustrate this, Table 3 presents a conjugation of the verb ɲatétɔ́n ‘to run this way’. Notice how the /t/ in {-ét-} disappears from the suffix in the forms for 2SG (‘you’), 1PL.INC (‘we all’), and 2PL (‘you all’). The 3PL form (‘they’) is an exception as it does not drop its final /t/ in the same environment.

A second example of haplology occurs when a verb root ending in /g/, /k/, or /k/ is followed directly by the andative suffix {-ukot-}. When this happens, the torík-ukot-	→	torí-íkɔt-	‘lead away’

final velar consonant of the verb root gets omitted in anticipation of the velar /k/ in {-ukot-}. Table 4 illustrates this by listing a few verbs ending in /g/, /k/, or /k/, which disappear when the next morpheme is the andative suffix {-ukot-}.

2.4.3 Non-final consonant deletion

Ik makes a clear distinction between NON-FINAL and FINAL forms of all morphemes and words. Presumably this is to delineate syntactic boundaries, often with stylistic overtones. Non-final forms are those that occur within a string of speech, with at least one element immediately following them. Final forms, by contrast, are those that occur at the end of a string of speech, before a pause, with nothing immediately following. This basic distinction was already shown to affect the voicing of vowels in §2.3. In the case of a small number of morphemes, it also affects consonants. Table 5 presents a few of these morphemes whose final forms contain consonants that are omitted in their non-final forms. The first column of the table shows the underlying form (UF) of the morpheme in question. This is followed in the next two columns by the non-final (NF) and final (FF) forms that actually occur in speech. Notice how the non-final forms are missing one consonant that is fully present in the UF and the FF.

2.4.4 Vowel assimilation

In addition to consonants, Ik vowels also undergo phonological changes at morpheme boundaries. For instance, when two dissimilar vowels come in contact with each other as a result of two morphemes joining together, there is a powerful urge for them to become more like each other. This VOWEL ASSIMILATION was already seen at work in Table 4, as when putting the root torik- 'lead' and affix -ukot- 'away' together led to torííkot- instead of **toríúkot-*. It is also seen in Table 6 where the 'yester-' adverb bàtsè becomes bèè in its non-final form instead of **bàè*. Ik vowel assimilation only takes place between morphemes and not inside morphemes. Inside morphemes, many combinations of dissimilar vowels are allowed, for example in kain 'year', mèùr 'drongo', and káín 'scent'.

Ik vowel assimilation can be clearly seen throughout the lexicon, as when the transitive infinitive suffix {-és} and the intransitive infinitive suffix {-òn} are affixed to verb roots. If the verb root that these suffixes attach to ends in /a/ or /e/, the vowel of the suffix fully assimilates it. Table 6 offers a few examples of this kind of vowel assimilation in verbal infinitives.

Another environment illustrating Ik vowel assimilation is the case declension of nouns. Since all Ik nouns end in a vowel, and since seven of the eight case suffixes consist of or contain a vowel, case suffixation creates a fertile ground for

Table 6: Vowel assimilation in verbal infinitives

Transitive
fá-és	→	féés	‘to boil’
isá-és	→	isεés	‘to miss’
itínjá-és	→	itínjéés	‘to force’

Table 7: Vowel assimilation in the declension of ηókí- ‘dog’

Case	NF	FF
Nominative	ηók-á	ηók- <sup>a</sup>
Accusative	ηókí-à	ηókí-k <sup>a</sup>
Dative	ηókí-è	ηókí-k <sup>e</sup>
Genitive	ηókí-è	ηókí- ∅
Ablative	ηókú-ò	ηókú- ∅
Instrumental	ηók-ó	ηók- <sup>o</sup>
Copulative	ηókú-ò	ηókú-k <sup>o</sup>
Oblique	ηókí	ηók <sup>i</sup>

vowel assimilation. For example, as Table 7 illustrates, in the declension of the noun root ηókí- ‘dog’, the /o/ in the ablative case suffix {-o} and the copulative case suffix {-ko} partially assimilate the final /i/ of ηókí- to /u/.

Other vowel assimilation effects are shown in the case declension of a noun like ηηρά- ‘cane rat’, as in Table 8, where the final /a/ of ηηρά- is assimilated by the dative, genitive, ablative, and copulative case suffixes in their non-final forms.

Table 8: Vowel assimilation in the declension of ɲurá- ‘cane rat’

Case	NF	FF
Nominative	ɲur-a	ɲur- ∅
Accusative	ɲurá-á	ɲurá-k <sup>a</sup>
Dative	ɲuré-é	ɲurá-k <sup>ε</sup>
Genitive	ɲuré-é	ɲurá- <sup>ε</sup>
Ablative	ɲuró-ó	ɲurá- <sup>ɔ</sup>
Instrumental	ɲur-ɔ	ɲur- <sup>ɔ</sup>
Copulative	ɲuró-ó	ɲurá-k <sup>ɔ</sup>
Oblique	ɲura	ɲur

Ik vowel assimilation may be PARTIAL, as when the word ɲókí-k<sup>o</sup> ‘It is a dog’ is rendered as ɲókú-k<sup>o</sup>. There, the /i/ at the end of ɲókí- ‘dog’ only moves back in the mouth to become /u/; it does not fully assimilate to become identical to the /o/ in the suffix. But vowel assimilation can also be TOTAL, as when ɲurá-é ‘of the cane rat’ becomes ɲuré-é. In that instance, the /a/ at the end of ɲurá- becomes fully identical to the vowel in the suffix.

Ik vowel harmony can be REGRESSIVE as in both prior examples, where a vowel exerts pressure on a preceding one. But it can also be PROGRESSIVE, as in the example of torí-úkót- becoming torí-íkót-, where the /i/ acts ahead on the /u/.

2.4.5 Vowel desyllabification

When the back-of-the-mouth vowels /ɔ/, /o/, /ɯ/ or /u/ wind up next to another vowel across a morpheme boundary, they may lose their status as the nucleus of a syllable and become the semi-vowel /w/ instead. When such vowel DESYLLABIFICATION occurs, the syllabic ‘weight’ of the vowel gets transferred to the following vowel in a process called COMPENSATORY LENGTHENING. This phonological change is evident in the transitive infinitives of verbs ending in a back vowel. Table 9 depicts how the back vowel at the end of the verb root changes to /w/ and then lengthens the vowel in the transitive suffix {-és}.

Vowel desyllabification also takes place in the case declensions of nouns. Any noun root that ends in a back vowel can have that vowel desyllabified to /w/, with the result that the following case suffix is lengthened. As Table 10 demonstrates, this happens with a noun like dakú- ‘plant, tree’ which ends with the back vowel /u/. In five of the eight cases – accusative, dative, genitive, ablative, copulative –

tutsu-és	→	tutswées	‘to wring’
ró-és	→	rwéés	‘to string’
ho-és	→	hweés	‘to cut’
ó-és	→	wéés	‘to call’
ru-és	→	rweés	‘to uproot’

the final /u/ of dakú- changes to /w/ and then lengthens the case suffix. Note that in the nominative case, the /u/ of dakú- is desyllabified but does not lengthen the nominative suffix {-a}. This irregularity is a peculiarity of the nominative case only and is seen in many other noun declensions.

Table 10: Vowel desyllabification in nouns

Nominative	dakw-a
Accusative	dakú-á	→	dakw-áá

2.5 Vowel harmony

Ik vowels participate in a phonological system called VOWEL HARMONY. This means that the language’s sound system seeks vocalic ‘harmony’ by ensuring that all vowels in a single word belong to the same vowel class. The vowel classes involved are the following: 1) the [+ATR] or ‘heavy’ vowels /i, e, o, u/ that are made with a larger cavity in the throat, giving them a ‘heavier’, more resonant sound, and 2) the [-ATR] or ‘light’ vowels /i, ε, ɔ, ʊ/ that are made with a smaller cavity in the throat, giving them a ‘lighter’, less resonant sound. Where the ninth vowel /a/ fits in with these two classes is a theoretical question that has not been conclusively resolved. However, what is clear is that in Ik, /a/ sometimes behaves as a [+ATR] vowel and other times as a [-ATR] vowel. And it certainly is found together with vowels from both classes within a single word. The Ik vowel classes anchored by the low vowel /a/ are depicted in Table 11:

Table 11: Ik vowel classes

[+ATR]		[-ATR]
i	u	ɪ	ʊ
e	o	ɛ	ɔ

Because of vowel harmony, all the vowels in a single word will generally belong to one of the vowel classes shown in Table 11. This is clearly evident in the lexicon where verbs consisting of multiple syllables and morphemes contain either [+ATR] or [-ATR] vowels, but not both. Table 12 shows an opposing set of such verbs. Notice how all the vowels in each word belong to one vowel class.

In some situations though, /a/ blocks vowel harmony from spreading to all the morphemes in a word. For example, when the stative suffix {-án-} falls between a verb with [-ATR] vowels and the intransitive suffix {-òn-}, the /a/ in {-án-} prevents the spread of harmony to the whole word. Table 13 gives a few examples of the harmony-blocking behavior of /a/. Notice how [-ATR] vowels are found to the left of {-án-} (in bold), while the [+ATR] /o/ in {-òn-} comes after it.

Ik has three suffixes which are said to be DOMINANT in that they always spread their [+ATR] value as far as they can within a word. These include the plural suffix {-í-}, the middle suffix {-ím-}, and the plural suffix {-íkó-}, all of which contain the vowel /i/. Unless an /a/ blocks the way, these three suffixes will cause all the vowels in the word they are found in to harmonize to [+ATR]. This dominant behavior is illustrated in Table 14. Notice how the [-ATR] vowels in the first column all become [+ATR] in the third column as a result of the dominance of the suffixes (in bold typeface).

Two other issues surrounding vowel harmony deserve mention. First, when two nouns are joined together to form a compound word (§4.3), vowel harmony does not occur between them. For example, the noun roots rébè- ‘millet’ and mèsè- ‘beer’ can be joined into the compound rébèmèsè- ‘millet beer’, in which, notice, the vowels belong to two different [ATR] vowel classes. An exception to this rule is when the second noun in the compound begins with the vowel /i/, in which case /i/ harmonizes the last vowel of the first noun, as when ɲókəkərɔ-ímà- ‘chick’ becomes ɲókəkəró-ímà- (where the first noun’s /ɔ/ is harmonized to /o/). Second, many of Ik's clitics take on the [ATR] value of their host word, for example when the anaphoric pronoun dée becomes dée in the phrase mə́kɔ́ʒé=dée 'in that rock pool'. Again, the exception is when the clitic contains /i/, in which case it becomes dominant, harmonizing its host, as when bárá́tínúɔ=díí 'from those corrals' becomes bárá́tínúo=díí (where the vowels /úɔ/ become /úo/).

2.6 Tone

2.6.1 Tone inventory

Ik is a tonal language. In terms of acoustics, this means that every vowel is identified not only by where it is formed in the vocal chamber but also by the PITCH with which it is uttered. This further entails that every syllable, morpheme, word, and phrase exhibits a specific and indispensable TONE pattern. At a phonological (or psychological) level, Ik has just two tones: HIGH (H) and LOW (L). All other tones that one hears can be traced back to these two. However, for practical applications like orthography and language learning, four sub-tones must be recognized. These include: HIGH, HIGH-FALLING, MID, and LOW. High tone is pronounced with a level, relatively high pitch. High-falling tone falls quickly from relatively high to relatively low pitch, often in the presence of a depressor consonant (see §2.6.4). Mid tone is a level, relatively medium-height pitch, while low tone is either relatively low and flat or tapering off before a pause. Table 15 presents the Ik tones with their names in the first column, pitch profiles in the second, and the orthographic diacritics for writing them in the third (the same diacritics employed throughout the foregoing dictionary sections):

Table 15: Ik tones

Tone	Pitch	Symbol
HIGH	[ ˥ ]	Á á
HIGH-FALLING	[ ˥˩ ]	Â â
LOW	[ <sub>˩</sub> ]	À à

2.6.2 Lexical tone

As mentioned above, every word in the Ik lexicon has a tone pattern or 'melody'. That is, Ik words are not identified solely on the basis of consonants and vowels

(as in non-tonal languages like English) but also on their tone pattern, which must be learned. Since every vowel and therefore every syllable bears a tone, the combination of many syllables in words produces a large inventory of tone patterns. And since the tone pattern of a word is totally unpredictable, language learners must resort to memorizing the pattern with the word. Table 16 gives a sample of the lexical tone patterns found on some short words in Ik:

Table 16: Ik lexical tone patterns

Nouns
HH	ámá-	‘person’
HL	ébà-	‘horn’
MH	cekí-	‘woman’
LL	ɲèrà-	‘girls’
Verbs
H	ɲáp-	‘open’
H(L)	éd` -	‘carry on back’
L	àts-	‘come’

2.6.3 Grammatical tone

Ik does not have grammatical tone, whereby tone alone can carry out a grammatical function. But tone often accompanies other grammatical signals, thereby reinforcing them. Thus, in that regard, it could be said that Ik has ‘semi-grammatical’ tone. For example, when the suffix {-íkó-} is used to pluralize a singular noun, the tone over the singular root usually changes, as when kɔl ‘ram’ becomes kólikwá. Similarly, when the venitive suffix {-ét-} is added to a verb stem, it often changes the overall tone pattern, as when bédés ‘to want’ becomes bédetés ‘to look for’, whereby the tone of the root béd- goes from HIGH to MID. Indeed, many of the suffixes of the language are associated with significant tone changes to the stem. So even if one learns the tonal melodies of nouns and verbs on their own, these melodies may change in particular grammatical contexts. This type of tone changeability is one of the system’s more difficult aspects.

The Ik tone system is challenging for foreigners and is not yet fully understood from an analytical point of view. Still, the good news is that with lots of practice, language learners can reasonably expect to develop a certain degree of communicative competency. For the most complete description of the tone system to date, the reader is invited to consult §3.2 in A grammar of Ik (Icé-tód) (Schrock 2014). That section expands on what has been presented here and includes more detailed discussions of other features of the Ik tone system.

2.6.4 Depressor consonants

In Ik, the voiced consonants /b, d, dz, g, ɸy, j, z, ʒ/ plus /h/ act as DEPRESSOR CONSONANTS. Depressor consonants are so-called because they ‘depress’ or pull down the pitch of neighboring vowels. In doing so, they act almost as if they had a very low tone of their own. The effect of Ik depressors is so strong that, over time, it led to the creation of a whole new set of lexical tone patterns. For instance, all Ik verbs with a HL pattern in their roots have a depressor as the first consonant after the initial high tone: dégèm- ‘crouch’, gúgùr- ‘hunched’, íbòt- ‘jump’, kídzim- ‘descend’, and ts’ágwà- ‘be raw’. This is because, in anticipation of the extra-low pitch of the depressor, the language compensated by putting a high tone before it where there used to be none. As another example, all nouns with the root tone pattern HL have a depressor as the only consonant between two vowels, as in: dóbà- ‘mud’, ébà- ‘horn’, édi- ‘name’, nébù- ‘body’, and wídzò- ‘evening’. And when these types of nouns lose their final vowel due to vowel devoicing, that is when the HIGH-FALLING contour tone comes into play, as in dóbà ‘mud’, ébà ‘horn’, édà ‘name’, nèbà ‘body’, and wídzà ‘evening’.

3 Morphology

3.1 Overview

MORPHOLOGY is the system by which a language grammar makes words. While the preceding chapter introduced meaningful sound units (phonemes), the present chapter describes larger meaningful units called MORPHEMES. Ik exhibits three types of morpheme: word, affix, and clitic. A WORD is defined as a free morpheme that can meaningfully stand alone. An AFFIX is a bound morpheme that must attach to a word to maintain its integrity. Affixes are indicated in this grammar by a hyphen before (and sometimes after) them, as in {-án-}, the stative adjectival suffix. A CLITIC is a hybrid: in some constructions it acts like a word standing alone, while in other constructions, it attaches to a word like an affix. Clitics may be marked in this grammar by an equals sign, as in {=kì} ‘those’.

Traditionally, languages are described as having WORD CLASSES, that is, categories of morphemes that have certain characteristics. These classes include the familiar major ones like ‘nouns’ and ‘verbs’ but often several others as well. For the purposes of this grammar sketch, free-standing words and clitics are considered ‘words’, while affixes are not. In Ik, thirteen word classes are recognized and include the following: nouns, pronouns, demonstratives, quantifiers, numerals, prepositions, verbs, adverbs, ideophones, interjections, nursery words, complementizers, and connectives (or conjunctions). Each of these word classes is briefly introduced in the following subsections, while a full list of Ik affixes can be found later in Appendix A.

3.2 Nouns

NOUNS and verbs make up the language’s only two OPEN word classes, meaning that they may have new members added to them. Nouns make up roughly 47% of the total Ik lexicon. Noun roots can be short, like eí- ‘stomach contents’, or long like pákabɔ́bwáátá- ‘finger ring’, but they all have at least two syllables in their root form. This structural condition is necessary because some case suffixes delete the last vowel of the noun root when they affix to it. All Ik nouns, without a single exception, end in a vowel in their root forms. Noun roots are represented throughout this book with hyphenated forms, indicating that in actual Ik speech, any noun must have at least a case suffix. In addition to case, nouns may take singulative or plurative suffixes and may be joined with other nouns to make compound nouns. §4 is devoted to expounding on Ik nouns.

3.3 Pronouns

PRONOUNS form a CLOSED word class, incapable of admitting new members. They ‘stand in’ for nouns whose specific names need not always be mentioned or repeated. Pronouns make up less than 1% of the Ik lexicon and yet have great grammatical importance. Most Ik pronouns are FREE, capable of standing on their own, while others are inextricably BOUND to verbs. They may be PERSONAL, capable of specifying grammatical person, or IMPERSONAL. Other categories of pronoun include: indefinite, interrogative, demonstrative, relative, and reflexive. §5 is devoted to describing the various kinds of pronouns in Ik.

3.4 Demonstratives

DEMONSTRATIVES form another closed word class, admitting no new members. They ‘demonstrate’ nouns by ‘pointing them out’, referring to them spatially, temporally, or discursively. They too make up less than 1% of the lexicon. Many Ik demonstratives have been analyzed as clitics: They seem sometimes to act like separate words, and yet in terms of vowel harmony, they act like suffixes. As clitics, they may be written connected to words in linguistic writing (with =), whereas in non-linguistic writing, they are written separately. For example, the phrase ‘these trees’ would be written as dakwítina=ni in linguistic publications and as dakwítina ni elsewhere. Ik has four kinds of demonstrative: spatial, temporal, anaphoric, and locative adverbial – all of which are discussed in §6.

3.5 Quantifiers

As their name implies, QUANTIFIERS ‘quantify’ the nouns that precede them. That is, they are separate words that follow nouns and convey the general quantity of the noun in terms of allness, bothness, fewness, or manyness. Specific, numeric quantity is expressed by the numerals, which are the topic of the next subsection. Ik quantifiers sometimes act more like numerals by directly following the noun they modify without an intervening relative pronoun, as in wika kwad<sup>e</sup> ‘few children’. But other times they act more like adjectival verbs by taking a relative pronoun between them and the noun they modify, for example, wika ni kwad<sup>e</sup> ‘children that (are) few’. In the former function as numerals, they have a distinct, perhaps more ancient root, as in kwàdè, whereas in their function as adjectival verbs, they have a truncated root in a verbal infinitive, in this case kwàd-òn ‘to be few’. The eight known Ik quantifiers are given in Table 17:

Table 17: Ik quantifiers

Non-final	Final
d̥àŋɪd̥àŋɪ	d̥àŋɪd̥àŋ	‘all, entire, whole’
mùŋù	mùŋ	‘all, entire, whole’
mùŋùmùŋù	mùŋùmùŋ	‘all, entire, whole’
tsídɪ	tsídɪ	‘all, entire, whole’
tsídɪtsídɪ	tsídɪtsídɪ	‘all, entire, whole’
gái	gái	‘both’
kwàdè	kwàd <sup>e</sup>	‘few’
kòmà	kòm	‘many’

3.6 Numerals

NUMERALS convey the specific number of the noun they modify. Ik has a quinary or ‘base-5’ counting system, meaning that it has individual words for the numbers 1-5 and then builds numbers 6-9 by adding the appropriate number to 5, as in tude nda kidĩ ts’agús ‘five and those four’, which is 9. The number 10 is technically not a numeral, but rather, a noun: toomíní-. Ik numerals directly follow the noun they modify, without an intervening relative pronoun. Just as the quantifiers kwàdè ‘few’ and kòmà ‘many’ can function as verbs, the numerals 1-5 can also function as verbs. Table 18 presents Ik numerals 1-9:

Table 18: Ik numerals

#	Non-final	Final
1	kònà	kòn	‘one’
2	lèbètsè	lèbètsè <sup>e</sup>	‘two’
3	àdè	àdè <sup>e</sup>	‘three’
4	ts’agúsé	ts’agús	‘four’
5	tùdè	tùdè <sup>e</sup>	‘five’
6	tude nda kèdĩ kòn	... nda kèdĩ kòn	‘five and one’
7	tude nda kidĩ lébètsè	... nda kidĩ lébètsè <sup>e</sup>	‘five and two’
8	tude nda kidĩ àdè	... nda kidĩ àdè <sup>e</sup>	‘five and three’
9	tude nda kidĩ ts’agúsé	... nda kidĩ ts’agús	‘five and four’

To form numbers 11-19, Ik builds off the noun toomíní- ‘ten’ and then repeats the quinary system shown in Table 18. For example, the number 17 is expressed as toomín nda kidĩ túde nda kidĩ lébètsè ‘ten and those five and those two’. Then, after 19, the numbers 20, 30, 40, etc. are based on the compound toomín-ékù- ‘ten-eye’, as in toomínékwa lébètsè ‘ten-eye two’, which is 20. The numbers for 100 (ηamíái-) and 1,000 (álifù-) have both been borrowed from Swahili.

3.7 Prepositions

PREPOSITIONS are usually small particles ‘pre-posed’, that is, put in front of a noun to indicate what its relationship is to another noun or to the wider sentence in which it occurs. Many of the functions that prepositions fulfill in other languages are handled by cases in Ik (see §7). However, Ik still has a very small, closed group of prepositions that somehow have survived the hegemony of case.

Nonetheless, they interact closely with case as each preposition selects the case that its noun head (or host) must take. Table 19 presents all the known Ik prepositions with their meanings and the cases they require on nouns:

Table 19: Ik prepositions

Preposition	Meaning	Case required
nàpèi	‘from, since’	ABLATIVE
dítá	‘as, like’	GENITIVE
néé	‘from, through’	GENITIVE
akáni	‘until, up to’	OBLIQUE
àkìlò	‘instead of’	OBLIQUE
gònè	‘until, up to’	OBLIQUE ikóteré	‘because of’	OBLIQUE
ndà	‘and, with’	OBLIQUE
pákà	‘until, up to’	OBLIQUE
tòni	‘even’	OBLIQUE

The following example sentences (1)–(8) offer an opportunity to see the prepositions from Table 19 in a variety of natural language contexts:

- (1) napei Kaabóngwə́ páka aw<sup>a</sup>

- (8) toni Pakóice jik, gókánikêdε
even Turkanas:OBL also seated:IPS:SIM:DP
'even the Turkanas as well, (were) staying there'

3.8 Verbs

VERBS comprise the second of Ik's two large open word classes. Like nouns, Ik verbs make up approximately 48% of the lexicon. Verb roots can be short like ó- 'call', long like gwerejéj- 'be coarse', or reduplicated like diridír- 'be sugary' and ipirípír- 'drill'. Verb roots are represented throughout this book with hyphenated forms, indicating that in actual Ik speech, any verb must have at least one suffix. That minimal suffix may be a subject-agreement suffix or a tense-aspect-mood (TAM) suffix like an imperative or optative. Ik verb stems can stand alone as an independent, self-contained clause and can have many suffixes strung together, as in sokóritiísínàk<sup>a</sup> 'we all have clawed' and zeikáákotinídε 'and they all grew large there'. Among the many suffixes that can derive nouns from verbs or inflect verbs for different meanings, there are: deverbatives, subject-agreement markers, directionals, the dummy pronominal, modals, aspectuals, voice and valency changers, and adjectivals. All these verb-related topics (and others) are treated more fully later on in §8.

3.9 Adverbs

ADVERBS make up a catch-all category of words that modify verbs or whole clauses. The sixty-or-so Ik adverbs make up less than 1% of the total lexicon. They include 'manner' adverbs like híjǒ 'slowly' and zúkù 'very', epistemic adverbs like tsábò 'apparently' and tsamε 'of course', and general adverbs like εdá 'only' and na bó ‘again’. Other important categories of adverbs are the tense-marking adverbs, certainty and contingency markers, and the conditional-hypothetical adverbs. All these types of Ik adverbs are discussed later in §9.

3.10 Ideophones

IDEOPHONES form a word class that is characterized by highly expressive words that denote physical phenomena like color, motion, sound, shape, volume, etc. They are often ‘sound-symbolic’ or onomatopoeic. That means that their very sound as they are pronounced evokes the physical perception they signify. For example, the ideophone bùlùk<sup>u</sup> means ‘the sound something makes when dropping into water’, like ‘splash!’ or ‘kersplunk!’ in English. At present, one hundred forty Ik ideophones (1.6% of total) have been recorded, but there are certainly many more in the language. And they are probably continually created. Table 20 offers a sample of the colorful variety of Ik ideophones on record:

3.11 Interjections

Like adverbs, INTERJECTIONS form a bit of a catch-all word class. Interjections include any word that expresses emotions or mental states of any kind, usually outside the grammar of a sentence. The roughly thirty Ik interjections that have been recorded make up less than 1% of the total lexicon. Ik interjections may consist of a single word like aaïi ‘ouch!’ or wúlù ‘yikes!’ or a short phrase like wika ni ‘these kids (I tell you)!’ or tó jóó ‘there, there (it’s okay)!’. Several of the other interjections on record are provided in Table 21:

ee/éé	‘yeah, yes’
hà	‘whatever!’
maráj	‘fine, okay!’
ɲoto ni	‘these guys (I tell you)!’
ne	‘here you go!’
ńtòó(n)dó	‘nah, no’
otí	‘whoa!’
wóí	‘aahh!’
yóói	‘uh-huh ... sure!’

3.12 Nursery words

NURSERY WORDS make up a small class of one-word expressions that act as commands or encouragements to babies or toddlers to do something. The ten Ik nursery words on record are laid out in Table 22 with English glosses.

3.13 Complementizers

COMPLEMENTIZERS are words that introduce reported speech or thought. For example, in the English sentence ‘She said that she agrees’, the word that is the complementizer that introduces that reported statement she agrees. Ik has only two complementizers. One of them, tòimènà- ‘that’, is technically a noun and thus belongs in the noun word class. But because of its function, it is dealt with here. The word tòimènà-, a compound of the verb tód- ‘speak’ and méná- ‘words’,

Table 22: Ik nursery words

bubú	‘nighty-night’	for going to sleep
bá	‘yummy’	for eating
dí	‘poo’	for defecating
dúudú	‘sitty-sit’	for sitting down
kó	‘wa-wa’	for drinking water kókó	‘no-no’	for not touching kukú	‘up-up’	for riding on mother’s back kwàà	‘pee’	for urinating
mamá	‘yum-yum’	for eating
núnú	‘yum-yum’	for breastfeeding

is used with a variety of speaking and thinking verbs. The second Ik complementizer, tàà, is a probably a derivative of the verb kúta ‘(s)he says’ that has been reduced over time. Even now it is usually used after the verb kút- ‘say’. Example (9) shows how tòimèná- is used in a sentence to introduce the clause mitída bònán ‘you are an orphan’. And example (10) shows the complementizer tàà introducing the clause iya njíníkija kóókè ‘our land is over there’:

- (9) Hyeiá    toimèna mitída bònán.
 know:1SG that:NOM be:2SG orphan:OBL
 ‘I know that you are an orphan.’
- (10) Kúta    jicie taa ia    njíníkija    kóókè.
 say:3SG I:DAT that be:3SG we:land:NOM there ‘He says to me that our land is over there.’

3.14 Connectives

CONNECTIVES or ‘conjunctions’ are words whose function is to join together other words, phrases, or clauses. If they are COORDINATING connectives like ńdà ‘and’, then they join grammatical units of equal status, like a word to a word, or an independent clause to another independent clause. Whereas if they are SUBORDINATING connectives like na ‘if’, then they join grammatical units of unequal status, usually a dependent clause to an independent one. Even though their role is to link grammatical units, not all of them come between the units they link. Many come before both, often as the first word in the sentence. Ik has roughly eight coordinating connectives and thirty subordinating ones – making up less than 1% of the lexicon. The coordinating connectives are presented in Table 23, while Table 24 offers a sampling of the subordinating connectives:

Table 23: Ik coordinating connectives kèdè	‘or’

kíná	‘and then, so then, then’
kòrì	‘or’
kòtò	‘and, but, so, then, therefore’
mísi ... mísi ...	‘either ... or ...’
náàtì	‘and then’
naḃó	‘furthermore, moreover’
ńdà	‘and’

The following natural-language examples illustrate three of the more commonly used coordinating connectives: kèdè, kòtò, and ńdà. In example (11), the connective kèdè ‘or’ joins two equal constituents, the nouns Tábayɔɔ and Fetíékù. In (12), the connective kòtò ‘and, but, then,’ links two independent but semantically related clauses, and in (13), the connective ńdà ‘and’ connects two passive clauses:

- (11) Tábayɔɔ kede Fetíékù?
 West:ABL or East:ABL
 ‘From the West or from the East?’
- (12) Ímukɔtiakòdè, marry.forcibly:1SG:SEQ:DP not:SEQ but kill:IPS animal:NOM ‘And from there I took (her) away as my wife, but no animal was killed.’
- (13) Sábese basaúr ńda kotsana cue.
 kill:SPS eland:NOM and fetch:IPS water:NOM ‘Elands were killed, and water was fetched.’

In contrast to the coordinating connectives shown in Table 23 and examples (11)–(13), subordinating connectives join units of unequal status, usually a subordinate (dependent) clause to a main one. Table 24 provides a sample of the thirty Ik subordinating connectives, while examples (14)–(16) below illustrate the function of some of these connectives in a few natural-language environments:

Table 24: Ik subordinating connectives

átà	‘even (if)’
dēmùsù	‘before, unless, until’
ikóteré	‘because’
kánì	‘in order that, so that’
mísì	‘if, whether’
na=	‘if, when’
náà	‘when (earlier today)’
nàpèì	‘since’
néé	‘if, when’
nòò	‘when (long ago)’
nótsò	‘when (a while ago)’
pákà	‘until’
sìnà	‘when (yester-)’
tònì	‘even’

In example (14) below, the subordinating connective dēmùsù ‘before, unless, until’ introduces a dependent clause that connects semantically to the following independent one. The same grammatical structure is also evident in (15) and (16), where the connectives mísì ‘if, whether’ and na ‘if, when’ set off short dependent clauses that logically lead into main clauses that follow them:

- (14) a. Dēmùsù Pakóice      deti riék<sup>a</sup>, before   Turkanas:OBL bring goats:ACC ‘Before the Turkanas brought goats,
- b. isio          noo njábiàn?

4.1 Overview

Single Ik NOUNS in a speaker's mental lexicon consist minimally of a ROOT. Roots are words that cannot be analyzed into smaller parts from the perspective of modern Ik. (Historical research may reveal how roots were put together over time, but that is the domain of etymology.) When plucked from the lexicon and put into actual Ik speech, every noun root must receive at least one suffix, which must be a CASE suffix. Every noun root ends in a vowel, and case suffixes either delete or attach to this final vowel. In addition to case suffixes, an Ik noun may take on a NUMBER suffix or may be joined with one or two other nouns to form a COMPOUND. Case suffixes are fully explained later in §7, while number suffixes and compounds are covered in the rest of this chapter.

Ik number suffixes include PLURATIVES and SINGULATIVES. Many noun roots can be pluralized if they are inherently singular in number. A few others can be singularized because they are inherently plural. In addition to these standard number-markers, Ik also has special POSSESSIVE number suffixes that combine the notions of number and possession into one suffix. And yet other nouns are MASS NOUNS, naming entities in the world perceived as inherently plural unities (like dust or water). These take no suffixes but are treated grammatically as plurals. Finally, some nouns are TRANSNUMERAL, construed as singular or plural and given the appropriate singular or plural modifiers, if needed.

Compounding is the primary way Ik acquires or makes new nouns – besides borrowing them from other languages. Compounds in Ik are made by putting two or three nouns together into a new composite word with special emergent characteristics. The first noun describes or specifies the second noun to make an aggregate meaning that is often different than that of the two separate nouns. Compounding and types of compounds are discussed below in §4.3.

Ik nominal suffixes differ individually in how they affix to noun roots. With the exception of five case suffixes, all nominal suffixes first delete the final vowel of the noun to which they attach. This is known as SUBTRACTIVE morphology. The case suffixes that preserve the final vowel are the accusative, dative, genitive, ablative, and oblique. For more on how case suffixes attach to nouns, see §7.

4.2 Number

4.2.1 Pluratives (PLUR)

Lk has four ways to show that a noun is plural: three PLURATIVE suffixes and SUPPLETIVE plurals. The three plurative suffixes are: 1) {-íkó-}, 2) {-ítíní-}, and 3) {-ikà-}. The first plurative suffix, {-íkó-}, is dominant in terms of vowel harmony, meaning it changes the vowels of a [-ATR] noun to [+ATR] unless /a/ intervenes and blocks it. For example, in some instances, the vowel /a/ spontaneously appears between the singular root and the suffix {-íkó-}. (This /a/ is a relic of an ancient singulative suffix *-at- that is no longer in use in current Lk.)

The use of {-íkó-} is limited to a small number of nouns (roughly 100); it is not applied to newly borrowed nouns. Table 25 presents several examples of nouns pluralized with this suffix. Note how the suffix harmonizes the vowels of the singular root except where the vowel /a/ blocks the leftward spread of harmony. Notice also that in some cases the suffix alters the tone of the singular root.

The second plurative, {-ítíní-}, is used to pluralize nouns that have only two syllables in their root. Table 26 gives a sample of disyllabic nouns pluralized with {-ítíní-}. Notice that if the singular noun has [-ATR] vowels, then the plurative suffix harmonizes to {-ítíní-}. Unlike the suffix {-íkó-}, {-ítíní-} never alters the tone of the root, though its own tone may conform to the tone of the root.

The third plurative, {-ikà-}, is used primarily to pluralize nouns with three or more syllables in their lexical root. Table 27 provides a sample of polysyllabic nouns pluralized with {-ikà-}. Notice that if the singular noun has [-ATR] vowels, then the plurative suffix harmonizes to {-ikà-}. Like {-íkó-}, {-ikà-} sometimes alters the tone of the singular noun as well as having its own tone altered.

Secondarily, the plurative {-ikà-} is used to pluralize a few nouns that have only two syllables in their lexical root. Why these few nouns do not take {-ítíní-} as a plurative instead is not known. A bit of speculation on this point might invoke the notion of MORA or the unit of syllable weight. Among the seven examples shown in Table 28, three of them contain the semi-vowel /w/ which may be thought to contain its own mora, as a vowel would. Likewise, two of the examples (hòò- and sédà-) contain depressor consonants which may also count for one mora. Perhaps in the remaining two (kíjá- and ríjá-), the voiced stop /j/ used to be a depressor consonant. Regardless of the historical explanation, Table 28 presents a few examples of {-ikà-} being used to pluralize disyllabic nouns.

4.2.2 Suppletive plurals

Ik also has a handful of singular nouns that cannot be pluralized in a productive way with any of the three suffixes discussed above. Three of these nouns on record are truly SUPPLETIVE in that their singular and plural forms bear absolutely no resemblance to each other. These are the first three in Table 29. The last three examples in Table 29 represent nouns that are semi-suppletive; even though one can discern a similarity between the singular and plural forms, the way the two forms are derived from each other is not productive in the language:

Table 29: Ik suppletive plurals

dī-	↔	dī-	‘ones’
kóróbádì-	↔	kúrúbádì-	‘things’

4.2.3 Singulatives (SING)

In contrast to pluratives, SINGULATIVES convert an inherently plural noun root to a derived singular. Ik has one such suffix that may be considered a true singulative in the contemporary grammar of the modern language, and that is {-àmà-} or {-àmà-}. Since this singulative is only used with personal entities, it seems likely that it is related etymologically to the word ámá- ‘person’. Table 30 gives the only four unambiguous examples of when this singulative is used. Note that its tone pattern may be altered by the tone of the plural root:

Table 30: The Ik singulative {-àmà-}

Plural		Singular
jáká-	→	jákámà-	‘elder’
kéà-	→	kéàmà-	‘soldier’
lɔŋótá-	→	lɔŋótómà-	‘enemy’
ŋímókɔká-	→	ŋímókɔká-ámà-	‘young man’

4.2.4 Possessive number suffixes (POSS)

In addition to standard pluratives and a singulative, Ik has what may be called POSSESSIVE number suffixes. These possessive suffixes – {-èdè-} in the singular and {-ìnì-} in the plural – each fuse the notions of number and possession into one morpheme. When they are affixed to a noun, they specify a) the grammatical number of the noun and b) its association with another entity (hence the ‘possession’). They do not specify the number of the possessor(s). For example, the word akeda<sup>a</sup>, a stem consisting of aká- ‘den’ and {-èdè-} (nominative case) can mean both ‘its den’ or ‘their den’. And the word akin, consisting of aká- ‘den’ and {-ìnì-} (nominative case), can mean either ‘its dens’ or ‘their dens’.

Within the broad notion of ‘possession’, the possessive number suffixes {-èdè-} and {-ìnì-} can signify more specific semantic relationships like part-whole, kinship, and association. Table 31 gives some examples of {-èdè-} expressing a part-whole relationship with the unnamed entity. Note how the meanings of the noun roots are extended metaphorically to denote structural parts of things. Note also that the tone of the root may be altered in the presence of {-èdè-}.

The plural possessive suffix {-ìnì-} has two special applications with human possessors. In the first, it is used to pluralize kinship terms, where a kinship association is explicit. In the second, it refers to people associated with a certain person in general terms. Table 32 illustrates both of these nuances, showing the singular root in the first column, and in the second, the root plus {-ìnì-}.

Ŋirikoó-	→	Ŋirikoíńí-	‘the people of Ŋiriko’
Tsiláà-	→	Tsiláíńí-	‘the people of Tsila’

4.2.5 Mass nouns

A small group of Ik noun roots are classified as non-count MASS NOUNS. These nouns are inherently, lexically plural. As such, they require plural demonstratives and relative pronouns. This group includes words for powders, liquids, and gases various particulate substances. Table 33 presents seven examples of mass nouns. The roots are in the table’s first column, followed in the third column by the noun in a phrase with the plural demonstrative ni ‘those’. Note that in the English gloss, the equivalent is provided but with a singular interpretation:

Table 33: Ik non-countable mass nouns

búré-	‘dust’	búrá ni	‘this dust’
cué-	‘water’	cua ni	‘this water’
kabasá-	‘flour’	kabasa ni	‘this flour’
sèà-	‘blood’	sea ni	‘this blood’
ts’údè-	‘smoke’	ts’úda ni	‘this smoke’

4.2.6 Transnumeral nouns

Another small group of Ik noun roots are inherently TRANSDUMERAL, meaning that they can be singular or plural depending on the speaker’s intention. Whatever number is imputed to them must be reflected in the grammar of the rest of the sentence, for example in subject-agreement on the verb or in any demonstratives or relative pronouns used to modify them. Ik transnumeral nouns cannot be pluralized in any of the ways discussed up to this point. But with the bound nominal morpheme -icíká- (see §4.3.4), they can be given a sense of distributiveness or variation. Table 34 presents three examples of Ik transnumeral nouns with their singular, plural, and distributive interpretations:

4.3 Compounds

For word-building purposes, Ik relies heavily on COMPOUNDING, joining two or more nouns together into a new composite word. The first noun (or pronoun) in a compound retains its lexical root form (that is hyphenated throughout this book), including its lexical tone. The last noun in a compound takes whichever case ending the syntactic context calls for. For example, in the compound riéwík<sup>a</sup> ‘goat kids’, the first root rié- ‘goat’ keeps its lexical form, while the second, wicé- ‘children’, has been modified by the nominative case suffix {-<sup>a</sup>}. If compounding changes the tone of its constituent parts, it will be the first noun that affects the others. In the rare compound with three constituent nouns, the first two stay in their lexical form (not counting tone), while the third is inflected for case, for example in Icé-móridókàkà- ‘cowpea leaves’, a compound of Icé- ‘Ik’, mòridò- ‘beans’, and kaká- ‘leaves’. In Icé-móridò-kàkà-, note that while the last two elements retain their lexical segments, their tone patterns have changed dramatically due to the influence of Icé- in spreading H tone throughout the word.

Ik compounds create two kinds of new meaning: 1) a narrower, more specific meaning in which the first noun specifies the second, or 2) a completely novel, unpredictable meaning. An example of the first type would be bɛbɛnásjá- ‘ember-wound’ or ‘bullet wound’ where the first noun bɛbɛná- ‘ember’ narrows down the possible references of śjá- ‘wound’ to a wound caused by a bullet. And an example of the second type of compounded meaning would be óbijoets’í-, a compound that literally means ‘rhino urine’ but is actually the name of a species of vine (that nonetheless was apparently the favorite urination spot of rhinos). Through both types of meaning-making, Ik compounds add a considerable amount of expressiveness and color to the language’s vocabulary.

In addition to the two broader semantic categories of compounds discussed above, five other categories of Ik compounds are recognized. These include the agentive, diminutive, internal, variative, and relational, all discussed in the sections to follow.

4.3.1 Agentive (AGT)

1 Ik forms AGENTIVE compounds by using the root ámá- ‘person’ (for singular) or icé- (for plural) as the last element in a compound. Although the root Icé- simply means ‘Ik people’ when standing on its own, in the agentive construction it denotes plural agents. Here ‘agent’ is understood broadly as any person or thing that does or is whatever is characterized by the first element in the compound. The first element may be a noun, as in deá-ámà ‘messenger’, literally ‘foot-person’, or a verb as in ɲwàxòni-ámà ‘lame person’, literally ‘to be lame person’. Note, however, that even though ɲwàxòni is a verb semantically, it has been deverbalized into a noun by the infinitive suffix {-òni}. Ik agentive compounds can be translated into English in various ways, depending on what is appropriate. Table 35 presents several examples of agentive compounds:

Table 35: Ik agentive compounds

Singular	Plural
aká-ámà-	aká-íce-	mouth-person	‘talker’
ɓɛkési-ámà-	ɓɛkési-íce-	walking-person	‘traveler’
itelesi-ámà-	itelesi-íce-	watching-person	‘watchman’
kɔŋési-ámà-	kɔŋési-íce-	cooking-person	‘cook’ ɲósomá-ámà-	ɲósomá-íce-	studies-person	‘student’
sisiká-ámà-	sisiká-íce-	middle-person	‘middle child’
yué-ámà-	yué-íce-	lie-person	‘liar’

4.3.2 Diminutive (DIM)

Ik forms DIMINUTIVE compounds by using the root imá- ‘child’ (for singular) and wicé- ‘children’ (for plural) as the second element in a compound. In the more literal interpretation, the first element is the animate being (animal or human) of which the second element is the ‘child’ or ‘children’, as in dódò-imà- ‘lamb’ or dódò-wicé- ‘lambs’. But when the first element is inanimate, the diminutive construction conveys a sense of ‘a small X’ or ‘small Xs’, for example kɔfò-imà- ‘a small gourd bowl’ and kɔfò-wicé- ‘small gourd bowls’. Lastly, the two interpretations can also get blurred, as when an animate being is perceived as smaller than normal but not as the child of anything. This can be seen, for instance, in the compound ídèmè-imà- ‘earthworm’, literally ‘snake-child’. Table 36 offers several more examples of the diminutive compound. Notice that when the whole construction is pluralized, both elements may get pluralized, as when ámá-imà- ‘someone’s child’ becomes roba-wicé- ‘someone’s (pl.) children’:

Table 36: Ik diminutive compounds

Singular	Plural
ámá-ìmà-	roba-wicé-	person-child	‘someone’s child’
bàrò-ìmà-	báritíní-wicé-	herd-child	‘small herd’
bísá-ìmà-	bísítíní-wicé-	spear-child	‘dart’
dómá-ìmà-	dómítíní-wicé-	pot-child	‘small pot’
gwá-ìmà-	gwá-wicé-	bird-child	‘chick’
ṛókí-ìmà-	ṛókítíní-wicé-	dog-child	‘puppy’
ójá-ìmà-	ójítíní-wicé-	sore-child	‘small sore’

4.3.3 Internal (INT)

So-called INTERNAL compounds are made with the bound nominal root ajíká- ‘among/inside’. When appended to plural noun, this nominal conveys a sense of interiority or internality to the noun. The internal compound, which occurs relatively rarely, is exemplified in Table 37:

Table 37: Ik internal compounds

Plural			Internal
àwikà-	‘homes’	→	awika-ajíká-	‘in/among homes’
ríjìkà-	‘forests’	→	ríjìka-ajíká-	‘in/among forests’
sédikà-	‘gardens’	→	sédika-ajíká-	‘in/among gardens’

4.3.4 Variative (VAR)

So-called VARIATIVE compounds are made with the bound nominal root icíká- ‘various (kinds of)’. When appended to a noun – singular or plural – this nominal morpheme communicates a sense of variety or the multiplicity of a type. As a kind of pluralizer itself, icíká- is may be called upon to pluralize five kinds of nouns: 1) transnumeral nouns, 2) nouns not usually pluralizeable in the usual sense, 3) inherently plural nouns, 4) already pluralized nouns, and 5) verb infinitives. Table 38 presents one example for each of these five kinds of nouns that the variative bound nominal icíká- can be used to pluralize:

Table 38: Ik variative compounds

Singular/Plural			Variative
gwaá-	‘bird(s)’	→	gwa-icíká-	‘kinds of birds’
cemá-	‘fights’	→	cemá-icíká-	‘war’
mená-	‘issues’	→	mená-icíká-	‘various issues’
dakwítíní-	‘trees’	→	dakwítíní-icíká-	‘kinds of trees’
wetési-	‘to drink’	→	wetési-icíká-	‘drinks’

4.3.5 Relational

Ik compounding is also used to create RELATIONAL NOUNS that express the spatial or structural relationship one thing has to another. In this way, Ik metaphorically extends body-part terms to other non-bodily relationships. Table 39 presents some of the Ik body-part terms used metaphorically:

Table 39: Ik body-part terms with extended meanings

Root	Lexical meaning	Relational meaning
aká-	‘mouth’	‘entrance, opening’
akatí-	‘nose’	‘handle, stem’ bakutsí-	‘chest’	‘front part’
bùbùì-	‘belly’	‘underside’
deá-	‘foot’	‘base, foot’
ekú-	‘eye’	‘center, point’
gúró-	‘heart’	‘core, essence’
iká-	‘head’	‘head, top’
kwayó-	‘tooth’	‘edge’
ɲabéri-	‘rib’	‘side’

So then, in an Ik relational compound, terms like those in Table 39 form the second element in the compound, a position in which they denote the ‘part’ in a ‘whole-part’ semantic relationship. Accordingly, the first element in the relational compound represents the ‘whole’ in the structural relationship. Table 40 displays a handful of such ‘whole-part’ compounds:

Table 40: Ik relational compounds

Roots	Lexical meaning	Relational meaning
aká-kwáyó-	mouth-tooth	‘lip’
dánjá-àkà-	termite-mouth	‘termite mound hole’
dòdì-èkù-	vagina-eye	‘cervix’
fátára-bakutsí-	ridge-chest	‘front of vertical ridge’
fetí-ékù-	sun-eye	‘east’
kaideí-ákátí-	pumpkin-nose	‘pumpkin stem’
kwará-dèà-	mountain-foot	‘base of mountain’ kwaré-ékù-	mountain-eye	‘saddle between peaks’
tabá-dèà-	boulder-foot	‘base of boulder’
ts’adĩ-ákà-	fire-mouth	‘flame’

5.1 Overview

PRONOUNS ‘stand in’ for nouns that are not explicitly mentioned. Most Ik pronouns are free-standing words, but the subject-agreement pronominals and the dummy pronominal are suffixes that are bound to verbs (and so are treated in §8 on verbs). In a sentence, free pronouns are handled just like nouns in that they take case and modifiers. The free pronouns discussed in this section fall into the following nine categories: personal, impersonal possessum, indefinite, interrogative, demonstrative, relative, reflexive, distributive, and cohortative.

5.2 Personal pronouns

Ik PERSONAL PRONOUNS represent the various grammatical persons that can be referred to in a sentence. The name is slightly misleading in that the pronouns can also denote nonpersonal, inanimate entities expressed by ‘it’ and ‘they’ (when referring to things). The Ik personal pronoun system operates along three axes: person (1, 2, 3), number (SG, PL), and clusivity (EXC, INC). The ‘first person’ refers to ‘I’ and ‘we’, the second to ‘you’, and the third to ‘she’, ‘he’, ‘it’, and ‘they’. ‘Number’ (singular or plural) obviously has to do with whether the entity is one or more than one. And ‘clusivity’ (EXCLUSIVE or INCLUSIVE) indicates whether the addressee of the speech is excluded from or included in the reference of ‘we’. Table 41 presents the seven Ik personal pronouns in their lexical root forms, while Table 42 presents the same but in their full case declension:

5.3 Impersonal possessum pronoun (PSSM)

Ik also has a special pronoun whose only function is to represent a POSSESSUM, that is, generally, an entity associated with another entity (a POSSESSOR). This pronoun has the form ení- and must be bound to another noun or pronoun as the last element in a compound construction. It is IMPERSONAL in that it communicates nothing about the possessor or the possessum except for the relationship of possession itself. The impersonal possessum pronoun can be used in a compound construction with personal pronouns or other nouns. Table 43 shows ení- in conjunction with all seven personal pronouns. It can also be used with full nouns (including deverbilized verbal infinitives) as the compound's first element. This type of possessive construction is illustrated in Table 44:

Table 43: Ik impersonal possessum with pronouns

5.4 Indefinite pronouns

Pronouns that are INDEFINITE stand for other entities but with a certain degree of indefiniteness or vagueness. All but one of the Ik indefinite pronouns are based on the root kɔní- ‘one’ or its plural counterpart kíní- ‘more than one’. The other one that is not based on these roots is saí- ‘some more/other’, a root that may not actually belong with this set but is included on the basis of its English translation. Table 45 provides a rundown of these Ik indefinite pronouns:

Table 45: Ik indefinite pronouns

kɔní-	one	‘another, some (SG)’
kón-ái-	one-place	‘somewhere (else)’
kóní-éní-	one-POSSESSUM	‘a(n), some (SG)’
kóní-ámà-	one-person	‘somebody, someone’
kón-ómà-	one-SINGULATIVE	‘some unknown person’
kíní-ámá-	many-person	‘some unknown people’
kíní-éní-	many-POSSESSUM	‘some (PL)’
saí-	some	‘some more, some other’

5.5 Interrogative pronouns

The role of INTERROGATIVE pronouns is to query the identity of the entity they represent. As a result, they are used to form questions. All but one of the Ik interrogative pronouns incorporate the ancient northeastern African interrogative particle **nd-/nt-*, and the one that does not has the form ìsì- ‘what’. The seven Ik interrogative pronouns are presented in Table 46. Note that in the table’s first column, forms are hyphenated when there is a hypothesis as to their internal morphological composition, which is reflected in the second column:

Table 46: Ik interrogative pronouns

ìsì-	what	‘what?’
nd-ái-	?-place	‘where?’
ndò-	who	‘who?’
nt-	?	‘where?’
nté-éní-	?-POSSESSUM	‘which (SG)’
ntí-éní-	?-POSSESSUM	‘which (PL)’
ntí	?	‘how?’

In the formation of a question, Ik interrogative pronouns fill the same slot as the nouns they are representing. It is common for the interrogative pronoun to be ‘fronted’: moved for emphasis to the first place in the sentence. When this happens, the interrogative pronoun takes the copulative case (see §7.8), as exemplified in sentences (17)–(18). Both demonstrated word orders are perfectly acceptable. For more on how questions are formed in Ik, please see §10.4.3.

5.6 Demonstrative pronouns

Ik also has a set of DEMONSTRATIVE pronouns that referentially ‘demonstrate’ or point to an entity. They are all based on either the singular form dî- ‘this (one)’ or the plural form dî- ‘these (ones)’ that differ formally only in regard to their vowel (/i/ versus /i/). The Ik demonstrative pronoun system is divided in three categories based on spatial distance from the speaker: 1) PROXIMAL, meaning near the speaker, 2) MEDIAL, meaning a relatively medium distance from the speaker, and 3) DISTAL, meaning relatively far from the speaker. The medial and distal forms, for both singular and plural, consist of the root dî-/dî- preceded by the cliticized distal demonstratives kî ‘that’ (derived from ke) for singular and ki ‘those’ for plural. The only difference between the medial and distal pronouns is the tone pattern whereby the medial form has a high tone on the last syllable, while the distal form does not. Table 47 presents these pronouns in their six lexical forms, while Table 48 gives their full case declensions. Note that the medial and distal forms are indistinguishable except in the NOM, INS, and OBL cases:

5.7 Relative pronouns (REL)

The role of RELATIVE pronouns is to introduce a relative clause: a clause embedded in a main clause to specify the reference of an entity in the main clause. One of the most fascinating features of the Ik relative pronoun system is that it is tensed. That is, it is able to encode the time period at which the statement contained in the relative clause holds or held true. The five time periods covered by these pronouns are 1) NON-PAST, 2) RECENT PAST (earlier today), 3) REMOVED PAST (yester-, last), 4) REMOTE PAST (a while ago), and 5) REMOTEST PAST (long ago).

The Ik relative pronouns are all enclitics based on the proto-demonstratives na ‘this’ and ni ‘these’ (see §6.2 below). Those proto-forms are identical to the non-past relative pronouns na ‘that/which’ and ni ‘that/which (PL)’ shown in Table 49. The remaining tensed relative pronouns are built from the proto-forms with a variety of ancient prefixes and suffixes such as si-/si- and -tso/-tsu.

As shown in examples (19)-(20), no matter where an Ik relative clause (RC) appears in a sentence, the relative pronoun will introduce it as the first element in the clause. The entity in the main clause that the relative clause is modifying – called the COMMON ARGUMENT – must be the last word before the relative clause. As a clitic, the relative pronoun attaches to the common argument. To learn more about the syntax of relative clauses, please see §10.3.2.

5.8 Reflexive pronoun

Ik has a REFLEXIVE pronoun that ‘reflects’ the impact of a verb back onto the subject of the verb. In other words, with the reflexive, the subject and object of an action are the same entity. The Ik reflexive pronoun has the form así- in the singular and ásíkà- in the plural, translated as ‘-self’ and ‘-selves’, respectively.

These reflexive pronouns are used extensively to make SEMI-TRANSITIVE verbs: verbs falling between transitive and intransitive. For example, while the verb ídzòn ‘to discharge, emit’ is intransitive and the verb ídzès ‘to discharge, emit, shoot’ is transitive, the verb ídzesa así ‘to shoot across (literally ‘to shoot -self’)’ is ‘semi-transitive’ because the subject and object of the shooting are the same entity. The full case declensions of the singular and plural reflexive pronouns are given below in Table 50, and example sentences (21)–(22) illustrate both the reflexive and the semi-transitive usages of these special pronouns:

6.1 Overview

Ik’s DEMONSTRATIVES grammatically point to a referent. In the case of NOMINAL demonstratives, the referent is an entity named by a noun, whereas ADVERBIAL demonstratives point to a scene or situation of some sort, encoded by a whole clause. The Ik nominal demonstratives are all ENCLITICS that come just after their host (the referent), as in ámá=nà ‘this person’. Because the locative adverbial demonstratives function as adverbs, they tend to come at the end of the clause they are modifying. Unlike demonstrative pronouns (see §5.6), spatial and temporal demonstratives are not nouns and never take case endings.

6.2 Spatial demonstratives (DEM)

Ik's SPATIAL demonstratives locate their referent in physical space in degrees of distance from the speaker. For singular referents, there are three degrees of distance: PROXIMAL (near), MEDIAL (relatively near/far), and DISTAL (more distant). For plural referents, the language inexplicably only distinguishes between proximal and distal. The singular demonstratives are usually translated into English as 'this' and 'that' and the plural ones as 'these' or 'those'. Table 51 below presents the whole set of spatial nominal demonstratives. Notice that in their final forms (FF), their final vowels may be whispered or omitted altogether:

Table 51: Ik spatial demonstratives

	Singular		Plural
	NF	FF	NF	FF
Proximal	=na	=na (=n)	=ni	=ni (=n)
Medial	=ne	=ne (=n)
Distal	=ke	=ke (=k <sup>e</sup> )	=ki	=ki (=k <sup>i</sup> )

Spatial demonstratives usually directly follow their referent, as in (23)-(24):

- (23) Eakwóó dā=n.
 man:COP this.one:NOM=DEM.SG.PROX
 'This one is a man.'
- (24) Káwese koto ríjǎ=ke.
 cut:SPS then forest=DEM.SG.DIST
 'And then that forest over there was cut down.'

6.3 Temporal demonstratives (DEM.PST)

The TEMPORAL demonstratives, by contrast, locate their referent in five periods of time: NON-PAST (present and future), RECENT past (earlier today), REMOVED past (yester-, last), REMOTE past (a while ago before yesterday), and REMOTEST past (long ago). Ik has both singular and plural temporal nominal demonstratives, and these are listed below in Table 52. These temporal demonstratives are usually translated into English as 'this' and 'that' in the singular, and 'these' and 'those' in the plural, but with a sense of time rather than physical location. Recall from Table 49 that Ik's relative pronouns are identical in form to the temporal demonstratives in Table 52, except that because relative pronouns never occur before a pause, they lack the final forms (FF) of those in Table 52:

Table 52: Ik temporal demonstratives

	Singular		Plural
	NF	FF	NF	FF
Non-past	=na	=n	=ni	=n
Recent past	=náa	=nák <sup>a</sup>	=níi	=ník <sup>i</sup>
Removed past	=sina	=sin	=sini	=sin
Remote past	=nótso	=nótso	=nútsu	=nútsu

Just like spatial demonstratives, temporal demonstratives directly follow the noun they refer to, as example sentences (25)-(26) illustrate:

- (25) Rájéte            dī=nák<sup>a</sup>.
 return:VEN:IMP one:OBL=DEM.SG.REC ‘Give back the earlier one.’
- (26) Gaana kaina=nótso            Lopíaríé zùk<sup>u</sup>.
 bad:3SG year:NOM=DEM.SG.REM Lopiar.GEN very

6.4 Anaphoric demonstratives (ANAPH)

The ANAPHORIC demonstratives locate their referent not in space or time per se but rather in shared communicative context. In other words, they point back to a referent that has either been mentioned already in the same discourse or is already known by both speaker and hearer by some other means. Ik has a singular and a plural anaphoric demonstrative which are enclitics that have the same form in both non-final and final environments (i.e., their final vowels are not omitted). These invariant anaphoric demonstratives, translated into English as ‘that’ in the singular and ‘those’ in the plural, are presented in Table 53:

Table 53: Ik anaphoric demonstratives

Singular	Plural
=dée	=díi

Ik anaphoric demonstratives also directly follow their referents, as in (27)-(28):

- (27) Itíóna                      natála=déé.
       be.important:3SG tradition:NOM=ANAPH.SG ‘That tradition (already discussed) is important.’

       come:3SG=PST people:NOM=ANAPH.PL Ethiopia:ABL
       ‘Those people (already mentioned) came from Ethiopia.’

6.5 Adverbial demonstratives

6.5.1 Overview

Besides the three types of nominal demonstratives described above, Ik also has a set of ADVERBIAL demonstratives that involve both locative and anaphoric locative reference. Unlike the nominal demonstratives, the adverbial demonstratives are technically nouns themselves in that they are marked for case and can take their own nominal demonstratives. Their function, however, is adverbial.

6.5.2 Locative adverbial demonstratives

The first type of adverbial demonstrative, the LOCATIVE ADVERBIAL demonstrative, locates the state or event expressed in a clause in physical space. Ik has three sets of such demonstratives. As shown in Table 54, Sets 1 and 2 are built on degree of distance, while Set 3, in addition to degree of distance, is also split into singular and plural. These demonstratives are usually translated into English as ‘here’, ‘there’, and ‘over there’, depending on relative distance:

Examples (29)-(30) illustrate the locative adverbial demonstratives:

- (29) Itáíá=bee        kíxánee=k°.
       reach:1SG=PST there=DEM.SG.DIST
       ‘I reached there yesterday.’
- (30) Kaini dzígwaá naíé=ne.
       go:SEQ trade:ACC there=DEM.SG.MED
       ‘And they went to do trade just right there.’

Set 3	Singular	Plural
Proximal	naí- (=na)	nií- (=ni)
Medial	naí- (=ne)
Distal	kóó (=ke)	kíí- (=ke)

6.5.3 Anaphoric locative demonstratives

The second type of Ik adverbial demonstrative are called the ANAPHORIC LOCATIVES, which are nouns with a demonstrative function. Like the locative nominal demonstratives, these demonstratives point to a specific place – or metaphorically, a specific time – while also signifying anaphorically that that place or time is already known, either from earlier in the discourse or for some other reason. Ik has two such demonstratives with roughly the same meaning: ts'édé- and tumedé-, both of which are typically translated as ‘there’ or more rarely ‘then’. Because these words are technically nouns, Table 55 presents them in a full case declension, while examples (31)-(32) illustrate them in sentences.

7 Case

7.1 Overview

Ik has a CASE system. This means that every noun has a special marking to show what role it has in the sentence. The language marks this role by means of a set of case SUFFIXES (endings). Four of the cases are marked with suffixes consisting of a single vowel, while for three others, the suffix consists of /k/ plus a vowel. An eighth case, the oblique, is marked by the absence of any suffix. In the following examples, (33)-(40), notice how the word ŋókí- 'dog' at the end of each sentence has a different ending depending on the case for which it is marked:

- (33) Atsa ŋók<sup>a</sup>.
come:3SG dog:NOM
'The dog comes.'
- (34) Cɛa boroka ŋókík<sup>a</sup>.
kill:3SG bushpig:NOM dog:ACC
'The bushpig kills the dog.'
- (35) Maa eméá ŋókík<sup>e</sup>.
give:3SG meat:ACC dog:DAT
'He gives meat to the dog.'
- (36) Mita ima ŋókí.
be:3SG child:NOM dog:GEN
'It is the child of the dog.'
- (37) Xɛba ŋókú.
fear:3SG dog:ABL
'He fears the dog.'

- (38) Kaa    ɲók<sup>o</sup>.
           go:3SG dog:INS
           ‘He goes with the dog.’
- (39) Bena       ɲókúk<sup>o</sup>.
           not.be:3SG dog:COP
           ‘It is not a dog.’
- (40) Mita    ɲók<sup>i</sup>.
           be:3SG dog:OBL
           ‘It is a dog.’

Eight examples are given above because Ik has eight cases: nominative, accusative, dative, genitive, ablative, instrumental, copulative, and oblique. Table 56 presents the non-final and final forms of the suffixes that mark all eight of these cases. Keep in mind that the null symbol <Ø> signifies either 1) that the case suffix is inaudible or, for the oblique case, 2) that there is no case suffix:

Table 56: Ik case suffixes

Case	Abbreviation	Non-final	Final
Nominative	NOM	-a	- <sup>a</sup> / <sub>-</sub> Ø
Accusative	ACC	-a	-k <sup>a</sup>
Dative	DAT	-e	-k <sup>e</sup>
Genitive	GEN	-e	-e/ <sub>-</sub> Ø
Ablative	ABL	-o	- <sup>o</sup> / <sub>-</sub> Ø
Instrumental	INS	-o	- <sup>o</sup> / <sub>-</sub> Ø
Copulative	COP	-o	-k <sup>o</sup>
Oblique	OBL	-Ø	-Ø

From Table 56, there may appear to be significant ambiguity in the Ik case system. For instance, the non-final forms of the nominative and accusative suffixes, the dative and genitive suffixes, and the ablative, instrumental, and copulative suffixes all look the same, respectively. In most cases, the key to disambiguating the suffixes is called ‘subtractive’ morphology. Two of the Ik case suffixes (namely nominative and instrumental) are subtractive in that they subtract or delete the final vowel of the noun to which they attach. So, for example, while the non-final forms of the nominative and accusative are identical, their morphological behavior is not: the nominative {-a} subtracts the noun’s final vowel, as when ḡókí- ‘dog’ becomes ḡók-á ‘dog:NOM’; by contrast, the accusative suffix is non-subtractive, as in ḡókí-à ‘dog:ACC’. Other case ambiguities like genitive versus dative and ablative versus copulative, in their non-final forms, can be resolved in the context of the sentence. Different verbs require different cases.

Since every Ik noun ends in a vowel, and since that vowel can be any of the nine (/i, ɪ, e, ɛ, a, ɔ, o, ʊ, u/), the collision of nouns and case suffixes gives rise to all kinds of vowel assimilation (see §2.4.4). The next two tables present declensions of two nouns illustrating vowel assimilation. Table 57 shows the noun fetí- ‘sun’ declined for all eight cases. In particular, notice how the vowel /o/ in the ablative and copulative suffixes partially assimilate the /i/ in fetí- to become /u/:

Table 57: Case declension of fetí- ‘sun’

Case	Non-final	Final
NOM	feta	fet <sup>a</sup>
ACC	fetíá	fetík <sup>a</sup>
DAT	fetíé	fetík <sup>e</sup>
GEN	fetíé	fetí
ABL	fetúó	fetú
INS	feto	fet <sup>o</sup>
COP	fetúó	fetúk <sup>o</sup>
OBL	feti	fet <sup>i</sup>

While Table 57 shows partial vowel assimilation caused by case suffixation, Table 58 reveals an instance of total assimilation. In this table, the noun kíjá- ‘land’ is declined for all eight cases. Note how the final /a/ of kíjá- becomes totally assimilated by the non-final dative, genitive, ablative, and copulative suffixes.

7.2 Nominative (NOM)

The NOMINATIVE case, marked by the suffix {-a}, is the ‘naming’ case, whose role is to: 1) mark the subject of main clauses, 2) mark the subject of sequential clauses (see §8.10.7), and 3) mark the direct object of clauses with 1st and 2nd person subjects (‘I’, ‘we’, ‘you’). Three examples ((41)–(43)) are provided below, each one illustrating one of the three grammatical roles of the nominative case. The third example contains seven sentences that show how Ik object marking is SPLIT: objects after 3-person subjects ((s)he/it, they) take the accusative case, while 1- or 2-person subjects (you, we) take objects in the nominative case:

7.3 Accusative case (ACC)

The ACCUSATIVE case, marked by the suffix {-ka}, is also split with regard to its basic function. One of its basic functions, that for which it is named, is to mark the direct object of any clause with a 3-person subject ((s)he/it, they). Its other common function is to mark the subject and any object of several kinds of subordinate clauses (including relative and temporal clauses). Each of these functions is exemplified by one of the sentences in examples (44)–(47). In the first example, a sentence with a 1-person subject is also given to show the contrast:

7.4 Dative (DAT)

The DATIVE case, marked by the suffix {-ke}, is the ‘to’ or ‘in’ case, whose role is to mark indirect objects (also called ‘extended’ or ‘secondary’ objects). These indirect objects may encode semantic notions like destination, location, recipient, experiencer, possession, and purpose. These are illustrated in examples (48)–(53):

Destination

       go:FUT:1SG home-DAT

7.5 Genitive (GEN)

The GENITIVE case, marked by the suffix {-e}, is the ‘of’ case, whose role is to encode a possessive or associative relationship a noun has with another noun (or, in rare cases, with a verb). Within the broad notions of possession and association are finer nuances such as: ownership, part-whole relationship, kinship, and attribution. These nuances are illustrated in examples (54)-(57):

Ownership

- (54) Hónini    hɪɔa        n̄tí-e        bórék<sup>ε</sup>.
drive:SEQ cattle:ACC they-GEN corral:DAT
‘And they drove their cattle to the corral.’

Part-whole relationship

- (55) Wasá        dɛɛdɛɛ    kwará-e.
stand:3SG foot:DAT mountain-GEN
‘He’s standing at the foot of the mountain.’

Kinship

- (56) Míná        cekíá        n̄tsí-é        zùk<sup>u</sup>.
love:3SG wife:ACC he-GEN very ‘He loves his wife very much.’

Attribution

- (57) Maránjá    muceá        bì-<sup>Ø</sup>.
good:3SG way:NOM you-GEN
‘Your luck is good.’ (lit: Your way is good.)

The genitive case has two further roles. One is the NOMINALIZATION of clauses, that is, the process by which a whole clause is changed into a noun phrase that can be used as a subject or object in another clause. For example, the clause Ceíkòta náa eakwa ídèmèk<sup>a</sup> ‘The man killed the snake’ can be compressed into the nominalized ceésúkota eakwée ídèmè ‘the killing of the man of the snake’ or ‘the man’s killing of the snake’. The other secondary role of the genitive has to do with verb kámón ‘to be like’. For unknown historical reasons, this particular verb requires genitive case marking on its complement, as in Kámá ròbèè mùn ‘He’s like all people’, where ròbè-è is analyzed as ‘people-GEN’ or ‘of people’.

7.6 Ablative (ABL)

The ABLATIVE case, marked by the suffix {-o}, is the ‘from’ case (or in some situations ‘at’ or ‘in’), whose function is to mark objects with the following semantic roles: origin/source, cause, stimulus, source of judgment, location of activity (versus static location, which is covered by the dative case). Each of these semantic roles of the ablative are illustrated among example sentences (58)-(62):

Origin/source

- (58) Atsia awá-o.
 come:1SG home-ABL

Cause

- (59) Badukota=noo jékè-ɔ.

Location of activity

- (62) Cemáta sédikà-o.
 fight:3PL gardens-ABL

7.7 Instrumental (INS)

The INSTRUMENTAL case, marked by the suffix {-o}, is the ‘by’ or ‘with’ case. Unlike the ablative suffix {-o}, the instrumental suffix is subtractive, meaning that it first deletes the noun’s final vowel. The function of the instrumental case is to mark secondary objects with such semantic roles as instrument/means, pathway, accompaniment, manner, time, and occupation. Each of these nuances are illustrated by one sentence each in example sentences (63)-(68):

Instrument/means

- (63) Tobíá=noo gasoa bis-<sup>o</sup>.

Occupation

- (68) Cɛma fités-o kwázikà<sup>e</sup>.

7.8 Copulative (COP)

The COPULATIVE case, marked by the suffix {-ko}, is the ‘is’ or ‘coupling’ case, whose function is to link one noun to another in a relationship of exact identity. In this function, the copulative marks three kinds of nouns: 1) a focused (fronted) noun, 2) the complement of a verbless COPULA (linking verb) clause, and 3) the complement of a negative copula of identity clause. These different uses of the copulative are illustrated in examples sentences (69)-(73):

Fronted subject

- (69) ɪŋgó-ó=naa wetím.

 ‘It was we (who) drank (it).’

Fronted object

Verbless copula complement

Negative copula complement

- (73) Bɛna=náá ɲɔ̀-cù-kɔ.
 not.be:3SG=PST I-COP

7.9 Oblique (OBL)

The OBLIQUE case, marked by the absence of any suffix, is the ‘leftover’ case. As such, it is employed to mark nouns in a variety of disparate grammatical roles and functions. Among these are the following: 1) The subject and/or object of an imperative clause, 2) the subject and/or object of an optative clause, 3) the object of a preposition, and 4) a vocative noun (used when calling someone). Each of these uses of the oblique case are demonstrated in examples (74)-(78):

Subject and/or object of an imperative clause

- (74) Deté      bi      cue=díí!
bring:IMP you:OBL water:OBL=those ‘You bring that water!’

Subject and/or object of an optative clause

- (75) Ёci nesibine      emuti      ntsí.

8 Verbs

8.1 Overview

Ik verbs consist of a verbal root (written in this book with a hyphen, as in wèt- ‘drink’) and at least one of a variety of available derivational and inflectional suffixes. The language has no prefixes except those borrowed centuries ago that no longer have any active function, for example the /a/ in ábùbùk- ‘bubble’ or the /i/ in ibóbór- ‘hollow out’. Reduplicating a verb root, partially or totally, has long been a strategy for creating a sense of continuousness or repetitiveness, as when itsán- ‘disturb’ becomes itsánitsán- ‘torment relentlessly’.

Ik employs a large number of suffixes to create longer verb stems. Among these are the INFINITIVE and other deverbalizing suffixes that change a verb into a noun that can take case endings, demonstratives, relative clauses, etc. One very key verb-building strategy of Ik is the DIRECTIONAL suffixes that signify the direction of the verb’s movement to or away from the speaker. These two directionals have also been extended metaphorically to express the beginning or completion of actions or processes. Another set of verbal suffixes deal with VOICE and VALENCY, that is, the number of objects the verb requires. Among these are the PASSIVE, IMPERSONAL PASSIVE, MIDDLE, CAUSATIVE, and RECIPROCAL.

Once a verb is taken from the mental lexicon and used in speech, it often requires SUBJECT-AGREEMENT marking, which Ik accomplishes through pronominal suffixes. Ik also has a special verbal suffix, the DUMMY PRONOUN, that goes on the verb whenever a peripheral argument, like a place or time designation, has been moved to the front of the clause or removed entirely.

The Ik verbal system has a variety of verbal paradigms based on MOOD and ASPECT. The basic distinction in mood is between REALIS and IRREALIS, or things that have happened and things that have not. Other modal distinctions include the OPTATIVE, SUBJUNCTIVE, IMPERATIVE, and NEGATIVE. As for aspect, the specification of the internal structure of a verb – complete or incomplete – Ik has suffixes that mark PRESENT PERFECT, INTENTIONAL-IMPERFECTIVE, PLURACTIONAL, SEQUENTIAL, and SIMULTANEOUS. Lastly, Ik exhibits a special set of ADJECTIVAL suffixes to cover the language’s need to express adjectival concepts.

8.2 Infinitives (INF)

8.2.1 Intransitive

INTRANSITIVE verbs allow only a subject and possibly an indirect object – a direct object does not figure into their semantic schema. The Ik intransitive INFINITIVE suffix is {-òní-}. It converts an intransitive verb to a morphological noun that can be used as a noun in a noun phrase. The infinitive is the CITATION FORM of a verb, the form one cites in a dictionary or in isolation from other words. Table 59 gives a few examples of intransitive infinitives from the lexicon:

Table 59: Ik intransitive infinitives

Root	Intransitive infinitive
ákáf-	ákáfòn	‘to yawn’
bòt-	bòtòn	‘to migrate’
cì-	cìòn	‘to be satiated’
dód-	dódòn	‘to hurt’
ěf-	ěfòn	‘to be tasty’
gwìr-	gwìròn	‘to squirm’
íkú-	íkúòn	‘to howl’

Because the infinitive is a noun morphologically, it can be fully declined for case as all nouns can. Table 60 gives the case declension of the verb wàtònì- ‘to rain’, which shows some vowel assimilation effects on [+ATR] vowels, as when /io/ becomes /uo/ in the ablative and copulative cases. Table 61 does the same for the [-ATR] verb wédònì- ‘to detour’. Note /io/ becoming /uo/ there as well:

8.2.2 Transitive

TRANSITIVE verbs are those that admit a subject and a direct object into their schematic of an active event. The Ik transitive infinitive suffix is {-ésì-}. It converts a transitive verb to a morphological noun that can be used as a noun in a noun phrase. Table 62 presents a few examples of transitive infinitives:

gíj-	gíjés	‘to shave’
ilók-	ilókés	‘to dissolve’

Table 63 gives the case declension of the deverbalized noun wetési- ‘to drink’, which shows vowel assimilation effects on [+ATR] vowels. Table 64 does the same for the [-ATR] verb for the [-ATR] verb wets’ési- ‘to knap’.

8.2.3 Semi-transitive

SEMI-TRANSITIVE verbs fall between transitive and intransitive in that they take an object, but the object is the reflexive pronoun así- ‘-self’, referring to the subject. This means that semi-transitive verbs are morphologically transitive but almost intransitive semantically. Another name for this is ‘middle’ (although see another Ik middle verb in §8.6.3). Table 65 provides a sample of semi-transitive verbs. No case declension is given for these because they decline the same way as the transitive infinitives shown in Table 63 and Table 64:

8.3 Deverbalizers

8.3.1 Abstractive (ABST)

The ABSTRACTIVE suffix {-ási-} can be used to replace the intransitive suffix {-òni-} for converting an intransitive verb to an abstract noun, for example, when hábòn ‘to be hot’ becomes hábàs ‘heat’. Table 66 gives several examples of abstract nouns derived from intransitive verbs:

Table 66: Ik abstract nouns derived from verbs

Intransitive infinitive		Abstract noun
ɓàŋòn	‘to be loose’	ɓaŋás	‘looseness’
ɛfòn	‘to be tasty’	ɛfás	‘(tasty) fat’
gaanón	‘to be bad’	gaánàs	‘badness’
fiyètòn	‘to be fierce’	fiyétás	‘fierceness’
kòmòn	‘to be many’	komás	‘manyness’
ɲwàxòn	‘to be disabled’	ɲwaxás	‘disability’
xɛbòn	‘to be shy’	xɛbás	‘shyness’

Because verbs deverbalized by the abstractive suffix are morphological nouns, they are fully declined for case. Table 67 gives one such case declension of the abstract noun kudási- ‘shortness’:

Table 67: Case declension of kudási- ‘shortness’

8.3.2 Behaviorative (BHVR)

The BEHAVIORATIVE suffix {-nànési-} is a complex suffix possibly consisting of the stative suffix {-án-} from §8.11.4 and the transitive suffix (§8.2.2) or the abstractive suffix (§8.3.1). Regardless of its composition, the suffix as a whole creates abstract concepts based on simple nouns, like ámánànès ‘personhood’ or ‘personality’ from ámá- ‘person’. Table 68 provides a few more examples:

Table 68: Ik behaviorative abstract nouns

Noun root		Behaviorative
babatí-	‘his/her father’	babatínànès	‘fatherhood’
cekí-	‘woman’	cekinànès	‘womanhood’

imá-	‘child’	imánànès	‘childhood’
lɔŋótá-	‘enemy’	lɔŋótánànès	‘enmity’
ŋókí-	‘dog’	ŋókínànès	‘poverty’

Because behavioratives are nouns morphologically, they are declined for case. Table 69 gives the case declension for the word eakwánánèsi- ‘manhood’:

8.3.3 Patientive (PAT)

The PATIENTIVE suffix {-amá-} converts a verb to a noun that is characterized by the meaning of the verb. It is called ‘patientive’ because the derived noun usually has the meaning of ‘patient’ or object of the original verb, as when meetés ‘to give’ produces meetam ‘gift’. Table 70 gives some examples of patientive nouns:

Table 70: Ik patientive nouns

Verb root		Patientive noun
áts-	‘chew’	ats’amá-	‘chewy food’
ḡek-	‘provoke’	ḡekamá-	‘provocation’

gam-	‘kindle’	gamamá-	‘kindling’
isúd-	‘distort’	isudamá-	‘falsehood’
ŋk-	‘eat’	ŋkamá-	‘eatable’

Because patientives are nouns morphologically, they are fully declined for case. Table 71 gives the full declension of the noun wetamá- ‘drink(able)’:

8.4 Directionals

8.4.1 Venitive (VEN)

The VENITIVE suffix {-ét-} denotes a direction toward a deictic center, usually (but not always) the speaker. It can be translated variously as ‘here’, ‘this way’, ‘out’, or ‘up’, but it is the Middle English word ‘hither’ that captures its essence nicely. The venitive suffix comes between the verb root and the infinitive suffix, whether intransitive or transitive. It can be used to augment any verb whose meaning includes motion or movement of any kind. Table 72 gives a few examples:

Table 72: Ik venitive verbs

Intransitive		Transitive
arétón	‘to cross this way’	béberetés	‘to pull this way’ hyotógètòn	‘to approach here’	ðaretés	‘to pull out’
iléétòn	‘to come visit’	futetés	‘to blow this way’ irimétòn	‘to rotate this way’	honetés	‘to drive out’
ηkéétòn	‘to get up’	irinetés	‘to turn this way’
téétòn	‘to fall down’	iteletés	‘to watch here’
tawétón	‘to sprout up’	sebetés	‘to sweep up’

Venitive infinitives are morphological nouns and thus are declined for case. See §8.2.1 and §8.2.2 for case declensions that show the relevant endings.

8.4.2 Andative (AND)

The ANDATIVE suffix {-ukot(i)-} denotes direction away from a deictic center, usually the speaker (but not always). It can be translated variously as ‘away’, ‘off’, ‘out’, ‘that way’, or ‘there’, but it is the Middle English word ‘thither’ that captures its essence nicely. Unlike the venitive suffix, the andative comes after both the verbal root and the infinitive suffix (in an infinitival construction). It can be used to augment any verb whose meaning includes motion or movement of any kind. Table 73 provides a few examples of andative verbs.

Because the andative suffix comes after infinitive suffixes, whenever an andative infinitive is declined for case, it is the andative suffix that takes case endings. Table 74 gives a declension of the [+ATR] andative verb sébésukotí- ‘to sweep off’, while Table 75 does the same for the [-ATR] verb sekésúkotí- ‘to scrub off’:

8.5 Aspectuals

8.5.1 Inchoative (INCH)

The INCHOATIVE suffix {-ét-} is identical to the venitive suffix described in §8.4.1, and this is because its meaning is a metaphorical extension of the meaning of the venitive. That is, the venitive meaning of ‘hither’ was extended to mean the beginning of a state or activity (for intransitives) or the starting up of some action or process (for transitives). The inchoative behaves morphologically (including case declensions) exactly the same as the venitive. Table 76 gives a few examples of intransitive and transitive verbs in the inchoative aspect:

Table 76: Ik inchoative verbs

Intransitive		Transitive
aeétón	‘to start ripening’	baletés	‘to ignore’

léjétón	‘to catch fire’	reetés	‘to coerce’
tsekétón	‘to grow bushy’	tajaletés	‘to relinquish’
wasétón	‘to refuse’	tametés	‘to ponder’

8.5.2 Completive (COMP)

The COMPLETIVE suffix {-ukot(i)-} is identical to the andative suffix described in §8.4.2, and this is because its meaning is a metaphorical extension of the meaning of the andative. That is, the andative meaning of ‘thither’ was extended to mean the completion of a change of state or activity (for intransitives) or the fulfillment of some action or process (for transitives). The completive behaves morphologically (including case declensions) exactly the same as the andative. Table 77 gives a few examples of lexical verbs in the completive aspect:

8.5.3 Pluractional (PLUR)

The PLURACTIONAL suffix {-i-} denotes an action or state that is construed as inherently plural in its realization. This notion of plurality can mean any of the following: 1) an intransitive action done more than once or done by more than one subject, 2) a state attributed more than once or of more than one subject, 3) a transitive action done more than once, done by more than one subject, or done to more than one object. In short, the pluractional suffix conveys the idea that the application of the verb is multiple. The pluractional suffix comes just before the infinitive suffix and is a dominant [+ATR] suffix that harmonizes [-ATR] vowels. Table 78 gives a few examples of intransitive and transitive pluractional verbs:

Table 77: Ik completive verbs

Table 78: Ik pluractional verbs

toḃéión	‘to be usually right’	nesíbiés	‘to obey habitually’
tatión	‘to drip constantly’	tirifiés	‘to investigate’

8.6 Voice and valence

8.6.1 Passive (PASS)

The Ik PASSIVE suffix {-ósi-} has the unusual distinction of being able to modify both intransitive and transitive verbs. With intransitive verbs, it adds the nuance of characteristicness to the meaning of the verb, often with the help of root reduplication. With transitive verbs, it has the usual function of a passive, which is to convert the object of a transitive verb into the subject of an intransitive verb. Table 79 gives examples of both intransitive and transitive passives:

Table 79: Ik passives

Intransitive		Transitive
botibotos	‘to be migratory’	búdòs	‘to be hidden’
bekesos	‘to be mobile’	cookós	‘to be guarded’ dekwidekos	‘to be quarrelsome’	ɖotsós	‘to be joined’
dɛpidɛɲos	‘to be restless’	jʉs	‘to be roasted’ gúránós	‘to be hot-tempered’	ɲápós	‘to be open’ mɔɲimɔɲos	‘to be gossipy’	ógoós	‘to be left’
tsuwoós	‘to be active’	tsánjós	‘to be anointed’

Another quirky feature of the Ik passive {-ósi-} is that it can function both as a passive infinitive suffix (taking case) and as a regular inflectional suffix followed by subject-agreement pronouns. When it is declined for case, it declines just like the transitive suffix {-ési-} in §8.2.2. Example (79) below illustrates this in a sentence where the passive infinitive búdòsi- ‘to be hidden’ gets the accusative case. Then, example (80) shows the same passive acting as a verb proper, taking the 3PL subject-agreement pronominal suffix {-át-}:

- (79) Bédáta búdòsi-k<sup>a</sup>.
 want:3PL hidden:PASS-ACC
 ‘They want to be hidden.’

- (80) Búdos-át<sup>a</sup>.
 hidden:PASS-3PL:REAL
 ‘They are hidden.’

8.6.2 Impersonal passive (IPs)

The IMPERSONAL PASSIVE suffix {-àn-} behaves like a typical passive in that it eliminates the agent of a transitive verb and promotes the object to subject. However, unlike the passive {-ósi-} described above, the impersonal passive cannot be specified for the person or number of its subject. Instead, it remains marked for 3SG regardless of who or what the subject may be. Another strange property of {-àn-} is that it can be used with intransitive verbs as well (just like the passive). When used with intransitive verbs, it has the function of downplaying the identity of the subject. For this reason, it can often be translated as ‘People ...’ or ‘One ...’, as in Tódiàn ‘People say (it)’. The impersonal passive is a grammatical morpheme not listed in the lexicon, and so it must be illustrated in examples like (81)–(82):

- (81) Inómésànà bì.
 beat:FUT:IPS you[SG]:NOM
 ‘You will be beaten.’
- (82) Kaíanà kàkààkòkε.
 go:PLUR:IPS hunt:inside:DAT ‘People go hunting.’ (Lit. ‘It is gone for hunting.’)

8.6.3 Middle (MID)

Ik has two MIDDLE suffixes: {-m-} and {-ím-}. Like the semi-transitive construction discussed in §8.2.3, the middle suffixes convert simple transitive verbs into something in the ‘middle’ of transitive and intransitive. That is, the Ik middle verbs convey that idea that if an action is done to an entity, it is the entity itself – if anything – doing it to itself alone, apart from any other explicit agent. The middles eliminate the agent and promote the patient to subject.

The middle suffix {-m-} always has a vowel between it and the preceding verb root. This vowel is usually a copy of the root vowel, as when dusés ‘cut’ becomes dusúmón ‘to cut (alone/on its own)’, but it can also have a non-copy vowel as in bokímón ‘to get caught’. For its part, the middle suffix {-ím-} – a dominant [+ATR] suffix – is always paired with the inchoative suffix {-ét-}, thereby forming the complex morpheme {-ímét-}. Table 80 below gives some examples of these two suffixes converting transitive verbs to middle verbs.

8.6.4 Reciprocal (RECIP)

The RECIPROCAL suffix {-ínósí-} denotes a reciprocal relationship that a verb’s subject has with itself. That is, the reciprocal collapses the subject and direct object of a transitive verb, or the subject and a secondary object of an intransitive verb, into just the subject of a reciprocal verb. In this regard, it is similar to the semi-transitive verbs from §8.2.3 that use the reflexive pronoun así ‘-self’. Table 81 provides a few examples of reciprocals derived from other verbs:

Transitive		Middle {-m-}
ḡáḡés	‘to open’	ḡáḡámòn	‘to open (alone)’
pakés	‘to split’	pakámòn	‘to split (alone)’
pulés	‘to pierce’	pulúmòn	‘to go out’
rajés	‘to return’	rajámòn	‘to return (alone)’
terés	‘to divide’	terémòn	‘to divide (alone)’
Transitive		Middle {-ímét-}

ibéléés	‘to overturn’	ibéléímètòn	‘to overturn (alone)’
kəkés	‘to close’	kokímétòn	‘to close (alone)’
rébès	‘to deprive’	rébímètòn	‘to be deprived (alone)’
tərəes	‘to coerce’	toreimétòn	‘to be coerced (alone)’

Table 81: Ik reciprocal verbs

Intransitive		Reciprocal
ḡekés	‘to walk’	ḡekésínós	‘to walk together’

Transitive		Reciprocal

ḡḡaarés	‘to help’	ḡḡáárínós	‘to help each other’
mínés	‘to love’	mínínós	‘to love each other’

Like the passive {-ósí-} discussed in §8.6.1, the reciprocal suffix can take either case endings (as a morphological noun) or subject-agreement endings (as a morphological verb). A case declension of ínínósí- ‘to cohabit’ is shown in Table 82, and in example (83) below, the reciprocal verb ibákínósí- ‘to be next to each other’ gets the accusative case. Then, example (84) shows the same verb acting as a verb proper, with the 3PL subject-agreement marker {-át-}:

Table 82: Case declension of ínínósi- ‘to cohabitate’

	Non-final	Final

 ‘They want to be next to each other.’

- (84) Íbákínós-át<sup>a</sup>.
 next.to:RECIP-3PL:REAL ‘They are next to each other.’

8.6.5 Causative (CAUS)

Ik expresses causativity with a morphological causative, the CAUSATIVE suffix {-ít-}. When this suffix is added to a verb with meaning X, it changes the meaning of the verb to ‘cause/make (to) X’. This suffix can be used to causativize intransitive and transitive verbs and comes right after the verb root, before the infinitive marker (if present) and any other suffixes like an inchoative or pluractional. If the last vowel of the verb root is /u/, the causative may be assimilated to the form {-üt-}. Table 83 gives several examples of causativized verbs.

8.7 Subject-agreement

Whenever Ik grammar requires verbs to agree with their subjects, one of the seven pronominal suffixes in Table 84 are used. Note that if the verb contains [-ATR] vowels, these suffixes will also be harmonized to [-ATR]. Just like the free pronouns described back in §5.2, these bound pronominal suffixes are organized along three axes: 1) person (1/2/3), 2) number (singular/plural), and 3) clusivity

Table 83: Ik causative verbs

Intransitive		Causative
bùkòn	‘to be prostrate’	bukites	‘to lay prostrate’
itúrón	‘to be proud’	itúrútés	‘to praise’
xèbòn	‘to be timid’	xèbítés	‘to intimidate’
Transitive
dimés	‘to refuse’	dimités	‘to prohibit’
nakwés	‘to suckle’	nakwités	‘to give suckle’
zízòn	‘to be fat’	zízités	‘to fatten’

(exclusive/inclusive). The form these pronominals ultimately take depends on the grammatical mood of the verb to which they attach. If the verb is in the irrealis mood (see §8.9.1), the suffixes appear with their underlying forms. Whereas if they are in the realis mood (see §8.9.2), the realis suffix {-a} first subtracts or deletes their final vowel. The difference in the two mood-based paradigms is depicted in Table 84. To see instances of the Ik subject-agreement suffixes in actual language use, you may refer back to example (43) in §7.2.

8.8 Dummy pronoun (DP)

Ik has a special verbal affix called the DUMMY PRONOUN because it represents a secondary (indirect) object that has been (re)moved. That is, the dummy pronoun is a form of object-marking on the verb, but not of direct object marking. For example, if an indirect object expressing location or time or means is moved to the front of a clause for emphasis, it leaves a trace on the verb in the form of the dummy pronoun. Seen from another perspective, the dummy pronoun is always a clue that there is a missing syntactic constituent in the clause.

The dummy pronoun has the form {-'dè} and is very volatile in terms of allomorphy, dramatically changing its form in different morpho-phonological environments. Once the /d/ is lost in non-final forms, vowel assimilation and vowel harmony so distort the dummy pronoun as to make it almost unrecognizable at times. Table 85 below is given to illustrate its diverse allomorphy:

Table 85: Allomorphs of the dummy pronoun {-'dè}

{-'dè}	-'è	-'d <sup>e</sup>
	-'è	-'d <sup>ε</sup>
	-'ì
	-'î
	-'ò
	-'ò

Examples (85)-(86) illustrate the dummy pronoun in two different morphological forms: final and non-final. Note that the tones associated with the pronoun in these examples do not match what is shown in Table 85; this is because of local tonal interference. In terms of function, the dummy pronoun in (85) indicates that an indirect object – the destination of the verb káátà ‘they go (went)’ – has been displaced from its usual spot after the verb to a place of focus at the beginning of the sentence (Ntsúó). Then in (86), the dummy pronoun marks an indirect object – the location of staying – that is missing from the clause entirely. Since this sentence was taken out of context from a story, most likely the missing object had been already mentioned earlier in the discourse:

- (85) Ntsúó=noo Icéá káátà-de.
 it:COP=PAST Ik:ACC go:3PL:REAL-DP
 'It's where the Ik went (to).'
- (86) Jɛjɔkɔ-ɔ sàà ròbà<sup>e</sup>.
 stay:3SG:SEQ-DP other:NOM people:GEN
 'And other people stayed (there).'

8.9 Mood

8.9.1 Irrealis (IRR)

A basic distinction in grammatical MOOD cleaves Ik verbal aspects and modalities right down the center, and this distinction is between IRREALIS and REALIS. As it applies specifically to Ik, the irrealis mood includes states and events whose actuality or reality are not expressly encoded in the grammar. Another way of saying this is that irrealis verbs in Ik can convey anything but whether a state or event has happened, is happening, or will happen. The morphological manifestation of the irrealis is that the final suffix of an irrealis verb – a subject-agreement pronoun – surfaces with its underlying form (see Table 84).

The verbal aspects and modalities that fall under the irrealis mood include the OPTATIVE, SUBJUNCTIVE, IMPERATIVE, NEGATIVE, SEQUENTIAL, and SIMULTANEOUS.

8.9.2 Realis (REAL)

In contrast to irrealis, the REALIS mood includes states and events whose actuality or reality are encoded in the grammar. That is to say, realis verbs in Ik include in their meaning the fact that something has taken place, is taking place, or will take place in the real world. The morphological manifestation of the realis mood is seen in the realis suffix {-a} that subtracts or deletes the final vowel of the subject-agreement suffix to which it attaches (again, see Table 84). In terms of verb types, the realis mood includes declarative statements in the past or non-past, questions about the past or non-past, and, rather paradoxically, negative imperatives (which one might expect to fall under irrealis).

8.10 Verb paradigms

8.10.1 Intentional-imperfective (INT/IPFV)

The INTENTIONAL-IMPERFECTIVE aspect suffix {-és-} has two functions, hence its hyphenated title. One is to denote either an intention on the part of animate subjects or an imminence on the part of inanimate subjects. It is in this role that it finds use as the usual translation for the English future tense. It is also the answer to the question, “How do you express future tense in Ik?” A second function is to denote grammatical imperfectivity: a sense that a state or event is ongoing or incomplete. The two concepts collapse into one when intention/imminence is viewed as the incomplete coming-to-be of a future state or event. And even though intention or imperfectivity may seem to fall under an irrealis mood, {-és-} can actually be used with verbs in either the realis or irrealis mood. In Table 86, {-és-} is illustrated with the verb àts- ‘come’ in its imperfective sense with a recent past tense marker (nák<sup>a</sup>) and then in its intentional (English ‘future’) sense:

Table 86: Ik intentional-imperfective aspect

1PL.INC	Atsésísìn.	‘We all will come.’
2PL	Atsésít <sup>a</sup> .	‘You all will come.’
3PL	Atsésát <sup>a</sup> .	‘They will come.’

8.10.2 Present perfect (PRF)

The Ik PRESENT PERFECT suffix {-‘ka} denotes a state or event recently completed (‘perfected’) but still relevant in the present. The suffix has a ‘floating’ high tone that shows up on the preceding syllable of 3SG verbs, for example in Nabʉkɔ́ták <sup>a</sup> ‘It is finished’. The /k/ in {-‘ka} disappears in non-final environments, making {-‘a} an allomorph. Table 87 presents the paradigm of the present perfect with the verb àts- ‘come’ in both non-final and final environments:

Table 87: Ik present perfect aspect

	Non-final	Final
1SG	Atsíàà ...	Atsíàk <sup>a</sup> .	‘I have come’
2SG	Atsíàà ...	Atsíàk <sup>a</sup> .	‘You have come’
3SG	Atsáá ...	Atsák <sup>a</sup> .	‘She has come’

1PL.INC	Atsísínàà ...	Atsísínàk <sup>a</sup> .	‘We all have come’
2PL	Atsítàà ...	Atsíták <sup>a</sup> .	‘You all have come’
3PL	Atsátàà ...	Atsátàk <sup>a</sup> .	‘They have come’

8.10.3 Optative (OPT)

The Ik OPTATIVE mood is used to express wishes, even ironic ones like ‘Let the enemies come!’. Optative verbs are often introduced with imperative verbs like Ógoe or Taláké, both of which mean ‘Let ...’. And all Ik optative verbs are translated into English with a sentence beginning with ‘Let ...’ or ‘May ...’.

Morphologically, the optative is marked by a combination of tone and special irregular suffixes. All optative verbs except 3PL show a kind of high-tone ‘leveling’ in the subject-agreement suffixes. The leveled high tone is pushed out to the end, creating a floating high tone. This high tone is not seen except in the fact that the last syllable of the subject-agreement suffixes remains at mid-tone level. Besides tone, special irregular suffixes mark the optative in 1SG, 1PL.EXC, and 1PL.INC verbs, while standard irrealis suffixes are used for the other paradigm members. Note that the 1PL.INC may also be called the ‘hortative’. Another peculiarity of the Ik optative is that there is no difference between its non-final and final forms. Table 88 presents the optative on the verb àts- ‘come’:

1SG	Atsine.	‘Let me come.’
2SG	Atsidi.	‘May you come.’
3SG	Atsi.	‘Let her come.’
1PL.EXC	Atsima.	‘Let us come.’
1PL.INC	Atsano.	‘Let us all come.’
2PL	Atsiti.	‘May you all come.’
3PL	Atsáti.	‘Let them come.’

8.10.4 Subjunctive (SUBJ)

The Ik SUBJUNCTIVE mood is used to encode statements that are somehow contingent or temporally unrealized. In that regard, it is an essentially irrealis verb form because it captures states or events that have not yet happened. It is also essentially irrealis in that it is marked simply by the absence of any marking. In other words, the subject-agreement suffixes surface with their underlying forms in the subjunctive mood, just as they appear in Table 84. The subjunctive is usually introduced either by dɛmʊsʊ ‘unless, until’ or damu (kója) ‘may’. Table 89 gives the full subjunctive paradigm with the verb àts- ‘come’:

Table 89: Ik subjunctive mood

	Non-final	Final
1SG	dɛmʊsʊ atsíí ...	dɛmʊsʊ atsí.	‘unless I come’
2SG	dɛmʊsʊ atsidi ...	dɛmʊsʊ atsîd <sup>i</sup> .	‘unless you come’
3SG	dɛmʊsʊ atsi ...	dɛmʊsʊ ats <sup>i</sup> .	‘unless she comes’
1PL.EXC	dɛmʊsʊ atsímí ...	dɛmʊsʊ atsím.	‘unless we come’
1PL.INC	dɛmʊsʊ atsísini ...	dɛmʊsʊ atsísín.	‘unless we all come’
2PL	dɛmʊsʊ atsítí ...	dɛmʊsʊ atsít <sup>i</sup> .	‘unless you all come’
3PL	dɛmʊsʊ atsátí ...	dɛmʊsʊ atsát <sup>i</sup> .	‘unless they come’

8.10.5 Imperative (IMP)

The IMPERATIVE mood is used to issue commands or instructions. If the recipient of the command is singular, then the suffix used is {-e’}, and if the recipient is plural, the suffix is {-úó}. The singular {-e'} has a floating high tone that raises any preceding low tones to mid. Both imperative suffixes are appended to the end of the verb stem, and no subject-agreement markers are needed. Both imperative suffixes are subject to vowel devoicing before a pause, as shown in Table 90:

Table 90: Ik imperative mood

Singular		Plural
Atse..!	Ats <sup>e</sup> !	'Come!'	Atsúó..!	Atsú!	'Come!'
Kae..!	Ka <sup>e</sup> !	'Go!'	Koyúó..!	Koyú!	'Go!'

8.10.6 Negative

Ik negates clauses by means of verblike particles that come first in the negative clause. If the negated clause has a realis verb, then the negator particle used is ńtá 'not'. If the negated clause has an irrealis verb, then the negator particle is mòò or nòò. Lastly, if the negated clause is past tense realis or present perfect realis, then the negator particle used is máà or náà. In the negated clause, the negator particle comes first, followed by the subject, and then the verb. Any negated verb takes the irrealis mood with the appropriate form of subject-agreement suffixes (see Table 84). To make all this more concrete, Table 91 gives example of the different negator particles used with different types of clauses.

8.10.7 Sequential (SEQ)

The Ik SEQUENTIAL aspect expresses states or events that happen in sequence. Usually a sequence of verbs starts with an anchoring non-sequential verb and/or time expression, and then a CLAUSE CHAIN begins in the sequential aspect. For example, when someone tells a story, they may start with one or two past tense realis verbs to set the stage and then continue the narrative with sequential verbs. Or if someone is giving a set of instructions, they may start with one or two imperative verbs followed by a chain of sequential verbs. Because of its versatility, the Ik sequential aspect is the language's most frequently used verb form.

Realis
1SG	Ńtá fíyeí.	‘I don’t know.’
2SG	Ńtá fíyeîd <sup>i</sup> .	‘You don’t know.’
3SG	Ńtá fíyè <sup>i</sup> .	‘She doesn’t know.’
Sequential
1SG	... moo fíyeí.	‘... and I don’t know.’
2SG	... moo fíyeîd <sup>i</sup> .	‘... and you don’t know.’
3SG	... mòò fíyè <sup>i</sup> .	‘... and she doesn’t know.’
Past realis

2SG	Máa naa fíyeîd <sup>i</sup> .	‘You didn’t know.’
3SG	Máà nàà fíyè <sup>i</sup> .	‘She didn’t know.’

Morphologically, Ik sequential verbs are recognized by a combination of tone, irregular subject-agreement suffixes, and the sequential aspect suffix {-ko}. Specifically, all 1 and 2-person sequential verbs exhibit high-tone leveling in their subject-agreement suffixes, which pushes a high tone out to the right of the verb. This floating high raises the preceding low tones to mid. These tone effects, plus the irregular suffixes, and the sequential marker {-ko} are shown in Table 92. Note that the sequential paradigm also has an impersonal passive marked with the suffix {-ese}. Its function is identical to that of the impersonal passive described back in §8.6.2. For more on how the sequential aspect works in actual language contexts, skip ahead to the discussion of clause-chaining in §10.8.2.

8.10.8 Simultaneous (SIM)

The Ik SIMULTANEOUS aspect is used to express states or events that are happening simultaneously to another state or event. In contrast to the sequential, the simultaneous aspect can only be used in subordinate clauses. That is to say, simultaneous clauses usually cannot stand alone without a main clause (with some exceptions). Because of its role of supporting sequential clauses, the simultaneous aspect is also commonly found in narratives and other longer discourses. It can be given a perfective interpretation as in ‘when I came’ or an imperfective one as in ‘while I was coming’. Morphologically, the simultaneous aspect is

8.11 Adjectival verbs

8.11.1 Overview

Since Ik does not have a separate word class of adjectives, it conveys adjectival concepts with ADJECTIVAL VERBS. These verbs have adjectival meanings but otherwise mostly behave like intransitive verbs. One way they do differ from normal intransitive verbs, though, is in the specific adjectival suffixes they can take. The next four subsections briefly describe these special adjectival suffixes.

8.11.2 Physical property I (PHYS1)

The PHYSICAL PROPERTY I adjectival suffix {-’d-} is found on adjectival verbs that express physical properties like appearance, size, shape, consistency, texture, and other tangible attributes. As a result, physical property I verbs are some of the language’s most colorful adjectivals. Physical property I verbs all contain two syllables with LH tone pattern, and in the infinitive, they take the intransitive suffix {-òní-}. Table 94 gives a sample of these colorful descriptive terms:

Table 94: Ik physical property I adjectival verbs

bufúdòn	‘to be spongy’
ɸómódòn	‘to be gluey’
dirídòn	‘to be compacted’
jamúdòn	‘to be velvety’
lets’édòn	‘to be bendy’
pɪdǽdòn	‘to be sleek’
tsakádòn	‘to be watery’

8.11.3 Physical property II (PHYS2)

The PHYSICAL PROPERTY II adjectival suffix {-m-} is found in adjectival verbs that also express physical properties like appearance, color, consistency, posture, shape, and texture. It can also express less tangible attributes like strength, weakness, quality, or personality traits. Physical property II verbs usually contain two syllables with a LH tone pattern or three syllables with a LHH tone pattern (without the infinitive suffix), and in the infinitive, they take the intransitive suffix {-òní-}. Table 95 gives a sample of these descriptive adjectival verbs in two groupings.

8.11.4 Stative (STAT)

The STATIVE adjectival suffix {-án-} forms adjectival verbs that express an ongoing state characterized by the meaning of a noun or a transitive verb. Because {-án-} contains the vowel /a/, it prevents vowel harmony from spreading between the verbal root and any suffixes that follow the stative suffix (for example, infinitive or subject-agreement suffixes). Table 96 and Table 97 present a few examples of stative adjectival verbs derived from nouns and verbs, respectively:

8.11.5 Distributive (DISTR)

Ik has two DISTRIBUTIVE adjectival suffixes: {-aák-} and {-ik-}. These suffixes have the function of distributing the meaning of an adjectival verb to more than one subject. The suffix {-aák-} can be used with all kinds of adjectival verbs, including the physical property and stative varieties, while the suffix {-ik-} has been found only with the two verbs of size, kwáts- ‘small’ and zè- ‘large’. Moreover, it commonly occurs together with {-aák-}, as in kwátsíkaakón ‘to be small (of many)’ and zeikaakón ‘to be large (of many)’. Table 98 gives a sampling of adjectival verbs with the distributive suffix:

9.1 Overview

The word class called ADVERBS is a catch-all category that includes words and clitics of various sorts that say something descriptive about a whole clause, for example, ‘how’ or ‘when’ it takes place, or how the speaker feels about the certainty or contingency of the clause. Accordingly, Ik adverbs can be divided up into MANNER adverbs, TEMPORAL adverbs, and EPISTEMIC adverbs. The following subsections take up each of these adverbial categories in a brief discussion.

9.2 Manner adverbs

MANNER adverbs modify whole clauses by commenting on, for example, the manner in which a state comes across or in which an action is done. Manner adverbs usually come near or at the end of the clause they modify, as shown in example sentences (87)-(88) below. Table 99 presents a sampling of these adverbs:

Table 99: Ik manner adverbs

dēmàsà	‘fast, quickly’
hǎǎjǎ	‘carefully, slowly’
jũkì	‘always’
jíkì	‘really, totally’
kòntiákè	‘straightaway’
mùkà	‘completely, forever’
pákà	‘indefinitely’
zùkù	‘very’

- (87) Gaana mēna=díí                      zuku jíkì.
 bad:3SG issues:NOM=those very completely ‘Those issues are really very bad!’
- (88) Zízaakótùò                      ròbà                      mùkà.
 fat:DIST:COMP:3SG:SEQ people:NOM completely

9.3.1 Overview

The Ik TEMPORAL adverbs situate their clause somewhere in the course of time. Ik has sets of temporal adverbs that deal with past tense, past perfect tense, and non-past (including future) tense. The past and past perfect tense adverbs are enclitics that come directly after the verb they modify. The future tense adverbs are free adverbs that come near the end or at the end of the clause.

9.3.2 Past tense adverbs (PST)

Ik divides PAST TENSE into four time periods and marks them with adverbial enclitics. They are: 1) RECENT PAST that covers the current day and is marked with =nákà, 2) REMOVED PAST that covers yesterday (or any last or ‘yester-’ time period like ‘yesterday’ or ‘yesteryear’) and is marked with =bàtsè, 3) REMOTE PAST that covers a few days or weeks before yesterday and is marked with =nótsò, and finally, 4) REMOTEST PAST that covers everything before the remote past and is marked with =nòkò. Each of these tense enclitics comes directly after their verb

Table 100: Ik past tense markers

 ‘My father went yesterday.’

- (90) Maráŋa=noo fíyekesa Icé.
 good:3SG=PST4 life:NOM Ik:GEN

9.3.3 Past perfect tense adverbs (PST.PRF)

The past tense can be combined with a perfect aspect to yield the PAST PERFECT tense. Unlike the simple past tense adverbs, Ik past perfect tense adverbs operate along only three periods of time: RECENT (earlier today), REMOVED (yester-), and REMOTE (before yester-). Table 101 presents the Ik past perfect tense adverbs, and example sentences (91)-(92) illustrate their use in natural contexts:

 then:INS=DEM die.3PL:COMP=PST.PRF
 ‘By that (time), they had died out a while ago.’

9.3.4 Non-past tense adverbs

Ik divides the NON-PAST tense into three rather vaguely defined time periods suggested by three adverbs. They are: 1) the DISTENDED PRESENT that includes just before and just after the present and is expressed by the adverb ts’òò, 2) the REMOVED FUTURE that includes the next future time period (next hour, next day, next year) and is expressed by the adverb táá, and 3) the REMOTE FUTURE expressed by the adverb fàrà (occasionally fàrò). Table 102 arranges these adverbs in a paradigm, while (93)-(94) below illustrates them in natural sentences:

Table 102: Ik non-past tense markers come:1PL.EXC next morning:INS

 ‘We will come tomorrow (i.e., next morning).’

9.4 Epistemic adverbs

9.4.1 Overview

The Ik EPISTEMIC adverbs express how the speaker feels or thinks about the certainty or contingency of the clause. Accordingly, this set of adverbs can be divided into the categories of INFERENTIAL, CONFIRMATIONAL, and CONDITIONAL-HYPOTHETICAL. All of the epistemic adverbs are enclitics that follow the verb in normal main clauses, but some of them can also be moved in front of the verb.

9.4.2 Inferential adverbs (INFR)

Ik can communicate a degree of uncertainty about a situation by means of a set of INFERENTIAL tense-based adverbs. This sense of making a tentative inference based on an observation can be translated into English with such turns of phrase as ‘Apparently ...’, ‘Maybe ...’, ‘It seems that ...’, ‘must have’, etc. Two of these inferential particles consist of the proclitic ná plus a past-tense particle, while the third combines ná with the adverb tsamɘ. Table 103 presents the three inferential adverbial particles in their final and non-final forms. Note that compared to the past-tense markers above in Table 100, the inferential time-scale is moved up one notch more recent. Examples (95)-(96) show the Ik inferential adverbs in context. Note that they can be placed before or after the main verb.

Table 103: Ik inferential adverbs

	NF	FF
Recent	=nábèè	=nábàts <sup>e</sup>	‘apparently earlier today’
Removed	=nátsàmù	=nátsàm	‘apparently yester-’

           INFR die:COMP:3SG
           ‘Apparently, it died.’

(96) Nánoo teremát<sup>a</sup>.

INFR separate:3PL

9.4.3 Confirmational adverbs (CONF)

Ik can also issue a confirmation of a state or event by means of a set of CONFIRMATIONAL adverbs that are derived from the tensed relative pronouns described back in §5.7. When used, these adverbs are placed before the verb, and the verb surfaces in its non-final form, almost like a question rendered in English ‘Why yes, did X not happen?’ – meaning that, of course, it did happen. These suffixes are first presented in Table 104 and then demonstrated in (97)–(98):

Table 104: Ik confirmational markers

Removed	sina	‘Of course____yester-.’
Remote	noo	‘Of course____long ago.’

(97) a. ŋkákóidà=bèè?

eat:COMP:2SG=PST2

bring:3SG=PST4

‘Did she bring (it)?’

b. Nòò dètà.

CONF bring:3SG

‘Yes, of course she did.’

9.4.4 Conditional-hypothetical adverbs (COND/HYPO)

If a state or event has not taken place but could or would take place, Ik can express that contingency with its CONDITIONAL-HYPOTHETICAL adverbs. There are three of these adverbs, but they are used to cover four periods of time. The first adverb covers non-past and recent past, the second removed past, and third remote past. These conditional-hypothetical adverbs are presented in Table 105:

Table 105: Ik conditional-hypothetical adverbs

	NF	FF
Non-past	=kánaà	=kána <sup>k</sup>	‘would’
Recent	=kánaà	=kána <sup>k</sup>	‘would have ... earlier today’
Removed	=kàsàmù	=kàsàm	‘would have ... yester-’
Remote	=kánoò	=káno <sup>o</sup>	‘would have ... a while ago’

The conditional-hypothetical adverbs come after the main verb:

- (99) Tóida=kánaa jíciè?
 tell:2SG=HYPO I:DAT ‘You would tell me?’
- (100) Cémísína=kánòk<sup>o</sup>.
 fight:1PL.INC=COND
 ‘We all would have fought.’

10 Basic syntax

10.1 Noun phrases

The Ik NOUN PHRASE consists first and foremost of a noun ‘head’, either a lexical noun or a nominalized lexical verb. As a head-initial language, Ik places its noun phrase head first in the phrase. Any subordinate, supporting elements follow the head. These optional elements may include anaphoric demonstratives, possessive markers, relative pronouns/temporal demonstratives, number markers, and spatial demonstratives. The Ik noun phrase structure can be formalized as follows, where elements in parentheses are optional:

(101) Ik NP structure:

HEAD (ANAPH)(POSS)(NUM)(REL/TEMP) (DEM)

The syntactical structure of noun phrases formalized in (101) is fleshed out among the real Ik noun phrases presented below in examples (102)-(110):

(102) HEAD

wik<sup>a</sup>

‘children’

(103) HEAD ANAPH

wika díí

‘those (specific) children’

(104) HEAD POSS

(110) HEAD ANAPH POSS NUM TEMP DEM

10.2 Clause structure

10.2.1 Intransitive

Ik INTRANSITIVE clauses consist minimally of a verb (v) and a subject (s) in a vs constituent order. The subject may be explicit, in which case it follows the verb, or it may be implicit, in which case it is merely marked on the verb. Basic intransitive clause structure is illustrated in example (111):

- (111) Epa<sub>v</sub>      ηók<sup>a</sup><sub>s</sub>.
 sleep:3SG dog:NOM
 ‘The dog sleeps.’

When a tense adverb is needed, it comes directly after the verb and before any explicit subject. And any other adverbial elements like extended objects (E) or adverbs, in that order, come after the subject. This word order is shown in (112):

- (112) Epá<sub>v</sub>=bee<sub>TENSE</sub>      ηóká<sub>s</sub>      kurú<sub>E</sub>.
 sleep:3SG=yester- dog:NOM shade:ABL

10.2.2 Transitive

Ik TRANSITIVE clauses consist minimally of a transitive verb (v), an agent (A), and an object (o) in a VAO constituent order. The subject may be explicit, in which case it comes between the verb and object, or it may merely be marked on the verb with a suffix. The object may also be dropped, in which case it is inferred from the context. Example (113) illustrates basic transitive clause structure:

- (113) Áts’á<sub>v</sub>      ηóká<sub>A</sub>      ɔkák<sup>a</sup><sub>o</sub>.
 gnaw:3SG dog:NOM bone:ACC
 ‘The dog gnaws the bone.’

When a tense adverb is needed, it comes directly after the verb and before any explicit subject. And any other adverbial elements like extended objects (E) or adverbs, in that order, come after the subject. This syntax is shown in (114):

- (114) Áts’á<sub>v</sub>=bee<sub>TENSE</sub>      ηóká<sub>A</sub>      ɔkáá<sub>o</sub>      ódàtù<sub>E</sub>
 gnaw:3SG=yester- dog:NOM bone:ACC day:INS

10.2.3 Ditransitive

Ik DITRANSITIVE clauses consist minimally of a ditransitive verb (v), an agent (A), an object (o), and an extended object (E) in a VAOE constituent order. If the agent is not mentioned explicitly, then it will still be marked with a suffix on the verb. The object and extended object may be left implicit but will be understood from context. The basic ditransitive clause structure is illustrated in (115):

- (115) Maa<sub>v</sub> kakaama<sub>A</sub> ɔkáá<sub>o</sub> ɲókík<sup>e</sup><sub>E</sub>.
give:3SG hunter:NOM bone:ACC dog:DAT

10.2.4 Causative

By adding an extra element in the form of a causing agent, Ik CAUSATIVE verbs change the structure of a clause. If the original clause was a vs intransitive one, then the causative changes it to a transitive VAO. If the original clause was a transitive VAO, then the causative changes it to a ditransitive VAOE. The following two examples, (116)-(119), show causative verbs making these structural changes:

Intransitive vs → Causative VAO

- (116) Fekíà<sub>v</sub> ɲk<sup>a</sup><sub>v</sub>.
laugh:1SG I:NOM
'I laugh'.
(117) Fekitéídà<sub>VA</sub> ɲk<sup>a</sup><sub>o</sub>.
laugh:CAUS:2SG I:NOM
'You make me laugh.'

Transitive VAO → Causative VAOE

- (118) Wetía<sub>v</sub> ɲka<sub>A</sub> cue<sub>o</sub>.
drink:1SG I:NOM water:NOM
'I drink water.'
(119) Wetitéída<sub>VA</sub> ɲka<sub>o</sub> cuék<sup>e</sup><sub>E</sub>.
drink:CAUS:2SG I:NOM water:DAT

10.2.5 Auxiliary

Ik has both true AUXILIARY verbs and PSEUDO-AUXILIARY verbs. Both types modify sentence syntax. The true auxiliaries, shown in Table 106, function as the syntactic main verb in a clause, while the semantic main verb follows the subject (s/A) in a morphologically defective form that consists of the bare verb stem plus a suffix {-a} (which may be the realis marker from §8.9.2). This means the constituent order of clauses with true auxiliary verbs is AUXSV for intransitives, AUXAVO for transitives, and AUXAVOE with extended objects. Again, in all these constructions, the AUX acts as the main verb from a syntactic perspective, while the defective verb carries the main meaning of the verbal schema. Another way to analyze this construction would be to say that the auxiliary verb and the defective verb together fill the single verb slot of the clausal syntax.

Table 106: Ik true auxiliary verbs

Root	Lexical	Aspectual
erúts-	‘be fresh, new’	RECENTIVE
ηór-	‘do already/early’	ANTICIPATIVE
sár-	‘be still/not yet’	DURATIVE

Example (120) illustrates the use of the recentive aspectual auxiliary verb erúts- in an intransitive clause with the structure AUXSVE:

- (120) Erútsíma<sub>AUXS</sub> atsa<sub>v</sub> sédà<sub>E</sub>.
 RECENT:1PL.EXC come garden:ABL

Example (121), on the other hand, shows the use of the anticipative verb ηór- in a transitive clause with the structure AUXAVOE:

- (121) ηórá<sub>AUXA</sub>=naa cεa<sub>v</sub> riáá<sub>O</sub> baratso<sub>E</sub>=nák<sup>a</sup>.
 ANTICIP:3SG=PST1 kill goat:ACC morn:INS=DEM.PST1
 ‘He already killed the goat earlier this morning.’

Lastly, sentence (122) exemplifies the durative aspectual verb sár- in a simple transitive clause working with the defective verb ts'ágwà-:

- (122) Sárá<sub>AUX</sub> séda<sub>s</sub> ts'ágwà<sub>v</sub>.
 DUR:3SG garden:NOM unripe
 'The garden is still unripe.'

In contrast to the above examples, the pseudo-auxiliary verbs only mimic true auxiliaries in that they are fully lexical verbs yet ones with potentially aspectual meanings, including the completive, inchoative, and occupative. However, because they are not syntactically auxiliary, they take complements as any lexical verb would (direct objects for the transitive ones and extended objects for the intransitive one). The pseudo-auxiliaries are presented in Table 107 with their lexical and aspectual meanings and the cases required in their complements:

Table 107: Ik pseudo-auxiliary verbs

Stem	Lexical	Aspectual	Case required
náb-úkòt-	'end, finish'	COMPLETIVE	NOM/ACC
itsyák-ét-	'begin, start'	INCHOATIVE	NOM/ACC
tođó-	'alight, land'	INCHOATIVE	NOM/ACC
isé-ét-	'begin, start'	INCHOATIVE	NOM/ACC
cèm-	'fight, struggle'	OCCUPATIVE	INS

Each of the aspectual meanings listed in Table 107 are given one example in the following sentences. The brackets in example (123) signify that the bracketed noun phrase as a whole is the object of the verb:

Completive

- (123) Nábukòtíáa<sub>VA</sub> [isóméésá nábúkwi]<sub>O</sub>.
 finish:1SG:PRF to.read:NOM book:GEN
 'I have finished reading the book.'

Inchoative

- (124) Itsyaketátaa<sub>VA</sub> wáánàk<sup>a</sup><sub>O</sub>.
 begin:3PL:PRF praying:ACC
 'They have begun praying.'

Occupative

- (125) Cεma<sub>v</sub> wika<sub>s</sub> wáák<sup>o</sup><sub>E</sub>.
 fight:3 children:NOM playing:INS

10.2.6 Copular

Ik COPULAR clauses have relational rather than referential meanings. They link a COPULAR SUBJECT (CS) to a COPULAR COMPLEMENT (CC) which represents an entity or attribute, depending on the specific copular verb involved. The constituent order of copular clauses is therefore v-CS-CC. Ik has three distinct copular or ‘be’ verbs that can express five copular relationships between them. These copular verbs are presented in Table 108 below, along with the case markings their subjects and complements are obligated to have:

Table 108: Ik copular verbs

Verb	Meaning	CS case	CC case
ì-	Existence	NOM	–
	Location	NOM	DAT
ìr-	Attribution	NOM	(adverb only)
mìt-	Identity	NOM	OBL
	Possession	NOM	GEN

The three copular verbs in Table 108 and their five potential meaning are each exemplified briefly in the example sentences (126)–(130):

Existence

- (126) Ia<sub>v</sub> didigwarí<sub>CS</sub>.
 be:3SG rain.top:NOM ‘Heaven [i.e. God] is (there).’

Location

- (127) Ia<sub>v</sub> lɔŋótá<sub>CS</sub> muceék<sup>e</sup><sub>CC</sub>. be:3 enemies:NOM way:DAT ‘Enemies are on the way.’

Attribution

- (128) Ira<sub>VCS</sub> tíyé<sub>ADV</sub>.
be:3SG like.this 'It is like this.'

Identity

- (129) Mitíá<sub>V</sub> ŋka<sub>CS</sub> bábò<sub>CC</sub>.
be:1SG I:NOM father.your:OBL
'I am your father.'

Possession

- (130) Mita<sub>V</sub> [awa=na]<sub>CS</sub> ŋgó<sup>e</sup><sub>CC</sub>.
be:3SG home:NOM=this we:GEN

10.2.7 Fronted

Ik can put special emphasis on any core nominal element by moving it to the front of the clause, before the verb, subject, and other constituents. Doing so obviously disrupts the usual syntactic structure of main clauses. Two kinds of fronting are observed in the language: 1) a CLEFT construction and 2) LEFT-DISLOCATION. In a cleft construction, the emphasized noun is moved to the front and given the copulative case. This puts it in an identifying relationship with the original clause out of which it just came. As a result, the newly arranged clause can be viewed as a kind of copular clause where the fronted element is the copular subject and the original clause the copular complement. This can in turn be formulized as: [NP:COP]<sub>CS</sub> [CLAUSE]<sub>CC</sub>. To make this more concrete, the next examples show the cleft construction with a simple transitive clause in (131) whose object (mès) gets fronted and marked with the copulative case in (132):

Cleft construction

- (131) Bédǣmà<sub>V</sub> ŋgwà<sub>A</sub> mès<sub>O</sub>.
want:1PL.EXC we:NOM beer:NOM
'We want beer.'
- (132) Məsɔɔ<sub>CC</sub> [ŋgóá bédǣm.]<sub>CS</sub> beer:COP we:ACC want:1PL.EXC
'It is beer (that) we want.'

Whereas the cleft construction involves removing a clausal element from a clause and building a new clause, left-dislocation simply relocates the element to the front of the clause, but still within the same clause. In this fronted position it is given the nominative case. This type of fronting can be formulized as: [NP:NOM || CLAUSE]<sub>CLAUSE</sub>, where the double vertical line symbolize a short pause. This type of left-dislocation is illustrated between example sentences (133)-(134):

Left-dislocation

- (133) Mée ení kaúda=díí.
 not:PRF see:1SG money:NOM=ANAPH
 ‘I haven’t seen that money.’

- (134) Kaúda=díí, mée ení.
 money:NOM=ANAPH not:PRF see:1SG ‘That money, I haven’t seen (it).’

10.3 Subordinate clauses

10.3.1 Overview

The constituent order of Ik SUBORDINATE clauses differs from that of MAIN clauses. Ik subordinate clauses exhibit an SV order with intransitive verbs, an AV order with transitives, and an AVE order with ditransitives – in short ‘sv’ instead of the usual ‘vs’. Case marking in subordinate clauses is also different: The fronted subject/agent and every direct object take the accusative case.

The next two subsections deal with two key kinds of Ik subordinate clause, the relative clause (§10.3.2) and the adverbial clause (§10.3.3).

10.3.2 Relative clauses

RELATIVE CLAUSES are subordinate clauses that modify a noun within a main clause. Ik relative clauses are restrictive, meaning they can only narrow the reference of their head noun rather than merely adding extra details about it. Relative clauses are introduced by the tensed relative pronouns discussed back in (§5.7), which, within the relative clause, stand in for a noun in the main clause called the COMMON ARGUMENT (CA). As such, the common argument is a full verbal argument in the main clause, while in the relative clause, the relative pronoun fills its syntactic slot.

As a subordinate clause, an Ik relative clause exhibits a different constituent order than typical main clauses. Specifically, an intransitive relative clause has the order sv (instead of vs), and a transitive relative clause has the order oAV (instead of VAO). In the former (intransitive), the subject slot (s) is filled by the relative pronoun, and in the latter (transitive), it is the object (o) that is represented by the relative pronoun. Furthermore, apart from the relative pronouns themselves, all subjects and direct objects in relative clauses are marked with the accusative case – another sign of grammatical subordination in Ik.

These attributes of Ik relative clauses are illustrated in examples (135)–(136). In (135), the common argument in the main clause is emuta ‘story’, which is modified by the relative clause ne éf ‘that is funny’. Note how the subject slot of the relative clause is filled by the relative pronoun ne (na with its vowel assimilated). Then, in (136), the common argument of the main clause is ima ‘child’, modified by the relative clause náa jcia tákí ‘that I mentioned’. Since the verb of the relative clause is transitive (tákés ‘to mean, mention’), it requires an object, which in this case is fulfilled by the relative pronoun náa representing the noun ima:

10.3.3 Adverbial clauses

The category of ADVERBIAL CLAUSES is rather broad as it includes any subordinate clause that modifies a main clause adverbially. Adverbial clauses are subordinate or ‘dependent’ precisely because they cannot stand alone but must be linked to an independent main clause. As subordinate clauses, adverbial clauses exhibit a constituent order that differs from both main clauses and relative clauses. Specifically, intransitive adverbial clauses have the order sv, while transitive adverbial clauses have the order AVO. Another correlate of subordination seen in most adverbial clauses – except for the conditional and hypothetical ones – is accusative case-marking on all core constituents (s/A/O) if they are explicitly mentioned.

Among the main kinds of adverbial clause in Ik are the following: TEMPORAL, SIMULTANEOUS, CONDITIONAL, HYPOTHETICAL, MANNER, REASON/CAUSE, and CONCESSIVE. Most types of adverbial clause – except for MANNER – have their own dedicated connective (or ‘conjunction’) or set of connectives, many of which are listed back in Table 24 under §3.14. Without exception, the subordinating connectives come first in the adverbial clause. Lastly, in terms of position, Ik adverbial clauses may come before or after the main clause they modify. Each of these types of adverbial clause is given one example apiece in (137)–(143):

Temporal

- (137) [Noo ntsiá badukotâd<sup>e</sup>]<sub>TEMP</sub>, kóǿfiak<sup>o</sup>.

10.4 Questions

10.4.1 Overview

Questions in Ik can be formed in two mutually exclusive ways: 1) by leaving the final word in the question in its non-final form (along with a questioning intonation) or 2) by using interrogative pronouns and often rearranging the syntax of the sentence. The first method is employed with what is called POLAR or yes/no questions: those whose answer is either 'yes' or 'no'. The second method is used for CONTENT or wh-questions: those whose answer is a substantive response to such interrogative pronouns as who?, what?, when?, where?, etc. These two types of question are briefly described in the following two subsections.

10.4.2 Polar questions

Polar questions are those that elicit a 'yes' or 'no' in response. In Ik, they are formed by leaving the last word or particle of the question in its non-final form (revisit §2.3 and §2.4.3 for a review). This open-endedness of form is a fascinating way the grammar reflects the open-endedness of a question – open to a response. Besides the non-final form of the last word, polar questions are identified by a change in intonation. This interrogative intonation is enacted by what is called a BOUNDARY low tone: a low tone that attaches to the final syllable. If the final syllable already has a low tone, then the boundary tone is not audible. But if the final syllable has a high tone, the boundary tone manifests as a high-low glide.

Examples (144)-(145) illustrate these features of polar questions. Note in the first part of (144) how the present perfect suffix {-ka} shows up in its non-final form (-'à), while in the second part, the final form is used (-'k<sup>a</sup>). Then, (145) shows the interrogative boundary low tone attaching to the high tone on the final syllable of cekúó 'is a woman', creating a high-low down-glide (cekúô):

- (144) a. Nábukotáà?
 finish:COMP:3SG:PRF[NF] ‘Is it finished?’
 b. Ee, nábukoták<sup>a</sup>.
 yes finish:COMP:3SG:PRF[FF] ‘Yes, it is finished.’
- (145) a. Cekúô?
 woman:COP[NF] ‘Is it a woman?’
 b. Ee, cekúó            ntsa<sup>a</sup>.
 yes woman:COP she:NOM

10.4.3 Content questions

In contrast to polar questions, content questions cannot logically take ‘yes’ or ‘no’ for an answer. Rather, answers to content questions – as their name implies – must contain content relevant to the specific interrogative pronoun used to make the inquiry (Ik interrogative pronouns are listed in Table 46). So if the question contains the pronoun ndò- ‘who?’, the answer must include a person. Or if the question contains the pronoun ndaí- ‘where?’, the response must refer to a specific location, and so on. Ik forms content questions by placing an interrogative pronoun in the syntactic slot of the unknown entity being queried (i.e. a person, place, time, manner, etc.). For example, in (146), the interrogative pronoun ndaí- ‘where?’ is filling the normal place where an object encoding the destination of kà- ‘go’ would go. A similar thing occurs in (147), where the pronoun isì- ‘what?’ fills the direct object slot required by the verb béd- ‘want’:

- (146) Keesída            ndaík<sup>e</sup>?
 go:INT:2SG:REAL where:DAT ‘You are going where?’
- (147) Bédá            isik<sup>a</sup>?
 want:3SG:REAL what:NOM
 ‘He wants what?’

However, what is more common is for the interrogative pronoun to be fronted for emphasis. As in other instances of fronting in Ik (see §10.2.7), the fronted element takes the copulative case marker {-ko}. In (148)-(149), examples (146)-(147) are repeated in their fronted (focused) forms, and two other interrogative pronouns are used in (150)-(151) to illustrate content questions:

- (148) Ndaíó      keesídàd<sup>e</sup>?
 where:COP go:2SG:REAL:DP ‘Where are you going?’
- (149) Isio      béd<sup>a</sup>?
 what:COP want:3SG:REAL ‘What does he want?’
- (150) Ndoo      óá              ĵcik<sup>a</sup>?

 ‘Who calls me?’
- (151) Ntéénóó tákid<sup>a</sup>?
 which:COP      mean:2SG:REAL

10.5 Quotations

Quotations involve reporting someone’s speech (or thought) – the speaker’s own or someone else’s – directly or indirectly. Ik fulfills this communicative need through the use of the verb kùt- ‘say’ followed by the actual quotation treated as an add-on clause. That is, unlike complements described below in §10.6, a quoted sentence in Ik is technically not an object of the verb kùt-. Instead, it is tacked on ‘extra-syntactically’ and given the oblique case (the ‘leftover’ case). This is proven by the fact that when the pronoun isì- ‘what?’ appears to be the object of kùt- with a 3SG or 3PL subject, isì- takes the oblique case instead of the accusative case as one would expect otherwise from case grammar (§7.3).

Many languages, English included, distinguish between direct and indirect quotative formulas, for example the direct “I said, ‘I will come’” versus the indirect “I said I will come”. By contrast, Ik does not distinguish the two grammatically. Instead, the proper sense has to be discerned from the context (and possibly from intonation). So the statement Kùtíá naa atsésí could mean either “I said, ‘I will come’” or “I said I will come”, depending on factors other than syntax.

In Ik quotative sentences, if there is an addressee of the quotation, they will appear in the dative case. And the quotative particle tàà ‘that’ is often inserted just before the quotation, though by all appearances it is optional. The example sentences (152)-(153) provide a demonstration of the quotative construction:

- (152) Kutíá bie [Pakóicéo=noo dzígwl]<sub>QUOTATION</sub> say:1SG you:DAT Turkana:COP=PST4 buy:PLUR
'I'm telling you it was the Turkana who used to buy.'
- (153) Kutana ngóé taa [atsúo dèmmùs]<sub>QUOTATION</sub> say:IPS we.EXC:DAT that come:IMP quickly
'They are saying to us, 'Come quickly!''

10.6 Complements

COMPLEMENTS are individual clauses that function as an ‘argument’ of the verb – as either subject or object. In other words, they are clauses within clauses. Unlike subordinate clauses which are added onto main clauses, complement clauses are added into other clauses. The main type of Ik complement clause is introduced by the COMPLEMENTIZER tòimènà- ‘that’, which is combination of a form of the verb tód- ‘speak’ and the noun ménà- ‘issues, words’. This compound word gives some evidence that Ik complement clauses (of this particular type) evolved from quotative clauses like those described above in §10.5.

Because a complement clause fits within the clausal grammar, it must somehow be declined for case (because all arguments of a verb in Ik take case, without exception). To meet this requirement, the complementizer tòimènà- bears the burden of case on behalf of the whole complement clause it is introducing. So technically, it is the complementizer – not the complement clause alone – that is the verbal argument. But because tòimènà- plus the complement is a frozen quotative formula, the whole construction can be analyzed as an argument.

To illustrate this, (154) presents a simple complement clause governed by the cognitive verb èn- ‘see’. The {curly brackets} indicate the boundaries of the main clause from the point of view of the syntax, in which the verb èn- ‘see’ selects its object tòimènà- ‘that’ for the accusative case. The [square brackets] mark the boundary of the complement clause seen from the point of view of semantics, for the actual content of ‘seeing’ is the clause that we have become very rich:

- (154) {Enáta [toimenaa]<sub>OBJ</sub> barufɔ́timáà                      zùk<sup>u</sup>]<sub>COMPL</sub> see:3PL that:ACC                      rich:COMP:1PL.EXC:PRF very ‘They see that we have become very rich.’

In addition to a direct object, an Ik complement clause can also function as an indirect object or even the ‘complement’ of a copular clause. For instance, in (155) below, tòimènà- and by extension the whole complement clause is acting as the indirect object of the verb xèb- ‘be afraid of, fear’, which requires the ablative case. Then, in (156), the verb is the copular verb mìt- ‘be’, which requires its nominal complement to be in the oblique case, as is seen with tòimènà-:

- (155) Xɛ́bíá [toimɛ̀nɔ́ maíá sílím]<sub>COMPL</sub> fear:1SG that:ABL ill:1SG AIDS:NOM
 ‘I am afraid that I’m ill with AIDS.’
- (156) Míta ja [toimɛ̀na níta nesíbi menák<sup>a</sup>]<sub>COMPL</sub> be:3SG just that[OBL] not hear:3SG words:ACC

10.7 Comparatives

COMPARATIVES are grammatical constructions that allow the comparison of two entities on the basis of some shared characteristic. Ik has two strategies for doing this: 1) the mono-clausal, which involves one simple clause, and 2) the bi-clausal, which involves a complex clause. Mono-clausal comparatives place the COMPAREE (entity being compared) in the nominative case and the STANDARD (entity the comparee is being compared to) in the ablative case. Since most comparable attributes are expressed as intransitive verbs in Ik, the PARAMETER (attribute) of the comparison is also an adjectival verb in such constructions. For example, in (157)–(158) below, the intransitive verbs zè- ‘big’ and dà- ‘nice’ are acting as the parameters, while their subjects are the comparees in the nominative case and their extended objects the standards in the ablative case:

- (157) Zeíá ńkà bù.
 big:1SG I:NOM you:ABL
 ‘I am bigger than you.’
- (158) Daa ɗa=na kíɗʒʒ
 nice:3SG this.one:NOM=this that.one:ABL

Bi-clausal comparatives, on the other hand, combine a main clause with a subordinate or ‘co-subordinate’ clause (§10.8.2). Both types are introduced by the verb

iló- ‘exceed, surpass’, which acts as the INDEX of the comparison (the gauge of the degree of difference between compared entities). If the indexical verb introduces a subordinate clause, it takes the simultaneous aspect, while if it introduces a co-subordinate clause, it takes the sequential aspect. In such bi-clausal comparatives, the comparee is still the subject of the main clause, while the standard is the object of the dependent clause. The parameter remains with the main clause verb (as in mono-clausal comparatives). But unlike mono-clausals, bi-clausal comparatives can have intransitive or transitive parametric verbs. In other words, actions as well as attributes can be compared in this type of construction.

In (159), the parameter lies with the verb tókób- ‘cultivate’, and ‘he’ (marked as 3SG on the verb) is being compared with ‘us’ (ngó-). The index of the comparison is the verb ilóíe ‘he surpassing’, which reveals the inequality of the compared actions of the two entities. Example (160) follows the exact same logic, only that the indexical verb ilóini is in the sequential aspect instead of the simultaneous:

- (159) Tokóbia                      edíá              [ilóíe                      ngók<sup>a</sup>]<sub>SIM</sub> cultivate:PLUR:3SG grain:ACC surpass:3SG:SIM we:ACC
          ‘He cultivates grain more than us.’
- (160) Sábúmósáta [ilóini                      toni peryan]<sub>SEQ</sub> kill:RECIP:3PL exceed:3PL:SEQ even government[OBL] ‘They’re killing each other even more than the government.’

10.8 Clause combining

10.8.1 Clause coordination

Two or more clauses can be linked in Ik through clause COORDINATION. This can result in clause ADDITION (‘and’), which joins two independent clauses of equal status. It can result in CONTRAST (‘but’), which joins clauses of equal syntactic status, the second of which is a counterexpectation to the first. And thirdly, clause coordination can result in DISJUNCTION (‘or’), in which two clauses of equal status are presented as different possible options.

Clause addition is achieved in two ways: 1) simply adjoining the clauses with a pause in between (represented by a period or comma in writing) or 2) linking the clauses with a coordinating connective like kòtò ‘and, but, then’ or ndà ‘and’. These first two methods are illustrated in (161)-(162). A third way to add one clause to another is to nominalize it – change all its main parts to nouns, put them in a noun phrase, and link it up to the other clause with ndà. Note from

(163) that with this third method, because the word ńdà ‘and’ is acting as a sort preposition, it requires its head noun(s) to be in the oblique case. Its head nouns in (163) are the subject (ngo) and infinitive (ńkésí) – both in the oblique case:

- (161) Míníá ńécáy<sup>a</sup>. Míná ntsa mésèk<sup>a</sup>.
 love:1SG tea:NOM love:3SG she:NOM beer:ACC
 ‘I love tea. She loves beer.’
- (162) a. Kakiésána=noo ńtí,
 hunt:PLUR:IPFV:IPS:REAL=PST how ‘How did people used to go hunting,
- b. ńda kaiána=noo waa waicíkée ńtí?
 and go:PLUR:IPS:REAL=PST pick:NOM greens:GEN how and how did they used to go picking greens?’
- (163) a. Itétimaa awák<sup>e</sup>, return:1SG:SEQ home:DAT
 ‘We returned home,
- b. ńda ngo ńkésí tɔbɔŋó<sup>e</sup>.
 and we:OBL to.eat:OBL mush:GEN and we ate meal mush.’

Contrast between two clauses in Ik can be expressed in two primary ways: 1) by simply adjoining the two clauses with a brief pause in between (marked with by a comma or period in writing) or 2) by linking the two clauses with the contrastive connective kòtò, which can mean ‘but’ as well as ‘and, then, therefore, etc.’. These two types are demonstrated in examples (164)-(165), respectively:

- (164) Bɛna ńcùk<sup>o</sup>. Bùk<sup>o</sup>.
 not:3SG I:COP you:COP
 ‘It’s not me. It’s you.’
- (165) a. Bɛɖufkɔ́tía=naa ńémeleká,
 search:COMP:1SG=PST1 hoe:NOM
 ‘I went and looked for the hoe,
- b. koto máa=naa ńunetí.
 but not=PST1 find:1SG
 but I did not find (it).’

Lastly, the idea of disjunction is expressed in Ik through the use of the connectives kèdè ‘or’ or kòrì ‘or’, as illustrated in example sentences (166)-(167):

- (166) a. Tókóbesída eda, farm:IPFV:2SG grain:NOM ‘Are you farming grain,
b. kede ntá tókóbesídì?
or not farm:IPFV:2SG or are you not farming (it)?’
- (167) a. Enída mēna gaanaakátik<sup>e</sup>, see:2SG things:NOM bad:DISTR:3PL:SIM ‘Do you see things being bad all around,
b. kori maráŋaakátik<sup>e</sup>?
or good:DISTR:3PL:SIM

10.8.2 Clause chaining

But in fact, the most common way Ik links independent clauses is through clause ‘co-subordination’ or CLAUSE CHAINING. To create a chain of clauses, the grammar starts with an anchoring phrase or clause to set the stage modally or temporally, and then it puts all the following mainline verbs in the sequential aspect (see §8.10.7), creating a chain of two or more clauses. When clause chaining is used in a story, the temporal ‘anchor’ can be a simple time expression like kaíníkò nùk<sup>u</sup> ‘in those years’ or a tensed statement like Atsa noo áamá ntanée taa Apááloréŋ ‘There came a man named Apaaloreng’. In (168), the clause chain is anchored by the initial adverbial phrase Na kónító ódoue baratsoó ‘One day, in the morning’, which puts the whole sentence in a temporal frame. Thenceforth, the clause chain proceeds clause by clause, each marked as SEQ1, SEQ2, etc:

- (168) a. [Na kónító ódoue baratsoó]<sub>ADV</sub> when one day:GEN morning:INS ‘One day, in the morning,
b. [ipuo takáákak<sup>a</sup>]<sub>SEQ1</sub> cast:3SG:SEQ shoes:ACC
he cast (his) shoes (in divination),

- c. [eguo takáika ébak<sup>a</sup>]<sub>SEQ2</sub> put:3SG:SEQ shoes:NOM gun:ACC and the shoes made (the shape of) a gun,
- d. [ipuo naóó]<sub>SEQ3</sub> cast:3SG:SEQ again and he cast (them) again,
- e. [egini ébak<sup>a</sup>]<sub>SEQ4</sub> put:3PL:SEQ gun:ACC and they made a gun.'

Although the sequential aspect and clause chains are common in narratives, they are also used extensively for other types of discourse, for example, exposition and instruction. The following expository clause chain in (169) details some of the steps taken in the process of grinding tobacco leaves. Note that there are two anchoring adverbial clauses, one at the beginning and one in the third line. After each one, there is a string of one or more verbs set in the sequential aspect:

- (169) a. [Náa iryámétaníé gwasák<sup>e</sup>]<sub>ADV1</sub>
 when get:IPS:SIM stone:DAT
 'When a stone is acquired,
- b. [ŋɔ́ɛɛɛ naḃálánjít<sup>a</sup>]<sub>SEQ1</sub> grind:INCH:SPS soda.ash:NOM soda ash is ground up.
- c. [náa naḃálánjítíá iwíḃímètík<sup>e</sup>]<sub>ADV2</sub>
 when soda.ash:ACC pulverize:MID:SIM
 When the soda ash is ground to powder,
- d. [páka naḃúḃúmùkòtùk<sup>o</sup>]<sub>SEQ4</sub> until powdery:COMP:SEQ until it becomes fine powder.'

Finally, the sequential aspect and clause chaining is often found operating in a set of commands or instructions. Such a clause chain may begin with one or more imperative verbs, followed by the sequential verbs in a chain of further commands or instructions. This type of clause chain is shown in (170):

- (170) a. [Na bédǝdɔɔ      bɛrésá      hoe]<sub>ADV</sub>
           if    want:2SG:SEQ to.build:NOM house:GEN
           ‘If you want to build a house,

Appendix A: Ik affixes

All of the affixes discussed in the preceding grammar sketch are listed in the table below for easy reference. When looking for an affix in the list, keep in mind that if it has two forms (for example the {-e} and {-ε} of the genitive case), both forms are given their own separate entry. Affixes that cannot be the terminal morpheme in a word have no final form, while those that can, have non-final and final forms.
